IN THE MAINE WOODS

The Great Aroostook Vacationland and Its Many Attractions.

IN The Maine Woods makes its bow for the year 1927 and extends an invitation to the thousands of old devotees who are regular visitors to this greatest of vacation regions and holds out a special welcome for the many who are planning their first visit to this land of scenic wonders and vacation allurements. Adjectives of appreciation for the many attractions in the Aroostook country are superfluous so far as the old-timers are concerned. They have beheld the lavishness of Nature's loveliness; they have partaken of the variety of vacation diversions; they have lived the life of the woods and, therefore, are enthusiastic panegyrists of all that is to be seen and of all that is to be enjoyed. New-comers, planning perhaps for their first visit, will find in the stories contributed by devotees of the Maine Woods and in the facts and figures assembled in this annual handbook, information which will be of interest and which will serve to further stimulate their desire to experience the pleasures which wait all those who come to this wonderland.

When one reads the accounts of visits to the Maine Woods of the early devotees — narratives of no lesser literary lights than James Russell Lowell and Henry D. Thoreau — it is evident that popularity is no recent accession for this wonderland. More than half a century back, the Maine Woods called forth many praises in prose and poetry — and so the chorus continues.

Getting to the Maine Woods in the old days meant travel by team and stagecoach, by slow steamboats and canoes, a journey calling for time and patience, while today, an overnight trip from Boston or New York with all the comforts of modern travel makes possible arrival in the woods the next morning. Despite their long-time popularity the Maine Woods show yearly increases in visitors. All the "original" vacation spots continue to attract and almost each season sees new places coming into favor, noteworthy among these being, the marvelous country in the Mt. Katahdin region, which offers in great abundance many forms of vacation pleasures, and climbing Mt. Katahdin, long one of the special attractions of the Maine Woods, has become a foremost vacation program.

Among the newer vacation regions in the Bangor and Aroostook territory are the up-North Aroostook waters, known as the Fish River Waters, which have become in later years widely famous for the splendid fishing in the numerous lakes and streams.

Here it should be emphasized that although modern comforts provided by the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad have removed all inconvenience in getting to this vacation wonderland, the Maine Woods still retain all the attractions and delights of pioneer days.

Among vacation resorts the Maine Woods camps are unique. Generally they are located on the shore of or close by lakes or rivers.

Most of the camps are some distance from settlements and are in themselves little communities. Supplies are kept stocked in the camps and many camps have gardens for vegetables and provide their own dairy products, eggs and poultry. The central cabin is used for a common dining-room and assembly, and then apart are series of smaller cabins. These individual cabins may have two or four apartments for sleeping, and in addition a little sitting room with open fire. The camp plan followed in the Maine Woods has many advantages. The individual cabins provide privacy for families and parties and give seclusion and coziness that are not found in hotels.

Wherever you go in the Maine Woods you are sure to find satisfaction because life at a Maine Woods camp is a continuous round of pleasure and contentment. Fishing parties, tramping expeditions, canoe picnics and many other forms of entertainment are always to be enjoyed. At all Maine Woods camps there are appetizing bills-of-fare to satisfy the ravenous demands that invariably come from the healthful invigorating life in the open. And what appetites are engendered by a woods vacation. The memory of luscious and satisfying offerings of the camp cooks, if the whole truth were told, dwell even longer than scenic charm and woodland wonders with not a few visitors to the Maine Woods.

Maine's proverbial heartiness of welcome and generous hospitality are manifest on all sides and it is this genuine whole-hearted hospitality which makes the State of Maine the favorite with the millions who yearly come within her borders.

A MID-WESTERNER'S IMPRESSIONS^{of} KATAHDIN

Wherein is Told the Delight of A New-Comer To This Vacation Region.

BY CARLTON J. CORLISS, Chicago, Illinois

MOUNT Katahdin, the unchallenged monarch of the Maine Woods, is not simply a mountain to be seen and described. Katahdin is an experience, an adventure, a poem that writes itself indelibly on the memory of those who come under its mystic spell. This scenic wonder of the North Woods must be known by personal contact to be truly appreciated. Only an actual visit will enable one to catch the enchanting, captivating spirit of the mountain. Katahdin must be sensed as well as seen. None but the climber can know the fascination of the approach, the thrill of the ascent or the rapture of the summit.

Our "voyage of discovery" began at Millinocket, reached after a comfortable over-night trip by sleeper from Boston. At Millinocket we obtained our first glimpse of this solitary, mysterious mountain thirty miles to the north. Our efficient guide, Hugh Colpitts of Millinocket, hunter, trapper, frying-pan-cook and entertainer-de-luxe, drove us twenty-two miles by automobile along a forest road, past Millinocket Lake, Ambajejus Lake and Upper and Lower Togue Ponds to the summit of Windy Pitch Hill. Here we shouldered our camping outfit and went on on foot along the old turnpike which leads to Basin Pond, ten miles beyond. Our trail lay through a magnificent forest of beech, birch and maple trees, with an occasional stand of spruce, fir and hemlock. For some distance we followed the banks of Roaring Brook and Sandy Stream, two picturesque mountain streams, the beds of which are strewn with countless granite boulders and rocks of all sizes and many hues, over which the crystal waters cascade in a succession of miniature waterfalls, presenting at every turn scenes that would send a landscape painter into transports of delight.

Thirty minutes' fishing at one point yielded a string of twenty fine specimens of mountain trout. A ten minutes' detour at another point brought us to Sandy Stream Pond, a little lake of rare charm, lying close to the base of Turner Mountain, one of Katahdin's foothills. Here fresh moose tracks were everywhere in evidence. None of the denizens of the forest were on hand to greet us, but we were told if we should come here in the early morning or at dusk we would be almost certain to see one or more moose feeding on the lily pads in the cove.

It is at this point that the ascent of Katahdin really begins, though the climb is gradual until Chimney Pond is reached. From Sandy Stream Pond we pursued a westerly course up and over a succession of rugged hills which brought us to Basin Pond Camp at sunset. Only twenty-four hours ago we had left our hotel in Boston, yet here we were deep in the Maine Woods, thirty-odd miles from the nearest settlement and sitting at the feet of Katahdin! It took Henry David Thoreau several weeks to accomplish as much in 1846, before there was any Bangor & Aroostook Railroad.

Basin Pond Camp occupies a picturesque spot on the shore of Big Basin Pond. To the north, across the pond, looms the boulder-strewn cliffs of North Peaks and Hamlin Ridge; to the south rises the mighty bulk of Pomola, forming the eastern buttress of Katahdin. The camp was unoccupied, but since it contained a cookstove, utensils, tables and bunks, we were able to make ourselves comfortable for the night. Shortly after our arrival a party of four young men from Boston arrived from Chimney Pond, and during the evening, as we lounged in the light of a log fire, smoking our corncob pipes, Colpitts, our guide, regaled us with many a good yarn of his stirring adventures as a hunter and trapper in the Northern wilds.

We were up at daybreak next morning, full of zest for the big climb that was to make this an unforgettable day in our lives. An hour's hike up through a rocky ravine, heavily timbered with spruce and fir, brought us to beautiful Chimney Pond, the sequestered "Jewel of the Maine Woods," hiding itself like a shy maiden deep in the rocky defiles of Katahdin. Chimney Pond, which bears the unique distinction of being the highest body of water in New England, is fed by springs of clearest water which issue from the seams and crevices of the massive cliffs that rise majestically on the south and west. No body of water in the eastern half of our country reflects on its mirrored surface such magnificent mountain scenery. On the south rises a 2,000-foot wall of rock reaching to Chimney Peak — a wall so steep that but few men have ever succeeded in scaling it, and then by only one trail, known as Chimney Trail, regarded by seasoned mountaineers as a dangerous undertaking because of the choke-stones that block the way. On the west of Chimney Pond lies a forest-clad slope of virgin spruce, and beyond this rises the almost perpendicular walls of Summit Peak, towering two and a half thousand feet above the surface of the pond — walls so sheer in places that no human being has yet succeeded in scaling them. To the north, and possibly two miles away, rises North Peake, or Eagle Top. The view from Chimney Pond is one of grandeur, sublimity and loveliness unequalled elsewhere in the Pine Tree State. Here is a bit of Rocky Mountain scenery in a New England setting.

On the eastern shore of Chimney Pond, where one is afforded an impressive view of Katahdin's precipitous cliffs, the State of Maine has erected a comfortable log cabin for the convenience of travelers. Close by is the Appalachian Club "lean-to," also extending a welcome.

Here, too, is "Dudley's Den," the mountain lodge of Roy Dudley, the genial "hermit-warden" and overseer of Katahdin State Park. Dudley probably knows the Katahdin country better than any other living man. On the rafters of his lodge are one hundred and seventy notches which indicate that he has been that many times to the summit. It was he who laid out the Dudley Trail, leading from Chimney Pond to Summit Peak by way of Sentinel Rock, Pomola Peak and the famous "Knife Edge," the most scenic of all Katahdin's trails.

What a Scene for the Artist's Brush; What a Paradise for the Angler: Sandy Stream, Looking West, With Pomola Peak in the Distance

Taking this trail from Chimney Pond, we were soon working our way through the Fallen Boulders, a nest of huge granite rocks, each of which in some past age worked loose from the mountain above and hurled itself with terrific force into the abyss. We were soon scaling the precipitous granite-strewn steep of Pomola Peak, the sharpness and difficulty of the ascent making our climb from Sandy Stream Pond to "The Chimney" seem level by comparison. A two-hours climb brought us to Sentinel Rock, a massive granite boulder projecting itself at a menacing angle forty feet out of the mass. An hour more and we were above the timber-line, where even the scrawny mountain cedars had disappeared and the only vegetation was a rich green moss which, in the sunlight, formed a striking contrast to the light gray boulders that dotted the mountainside. At Pomola Peak, reached after four hours of strenuous climbing from Chimney Pond, we paused to rest.

In every direction the view from Pomola is superb. The impressiveness of nature's wonderland, of lakes emblossomed in deep forest, of mountains and hills purple-blue in the distance, vies with the scenic attractions of the mountain itself. On the west, nearly a mile away, looms the great bulk of Summit Peak, Maine's proudest pinnacle, separated from Pomola by a yawning chasm two thousand feet in depth. Viewed from Pomola, "The Chimney" bears a striking resemblance to a volcanic crater.

From Pomola Peak the Dudley Trail leads across the crest of the rugged and perilous "Knife Edge," a narrow wall of hornblende rock, which presents an interesting study for the geologist. The "Knife Edge" bridges the gap between Pomola and South Peak. It is between Pomola and Chimney Peak, the latter forming the first "nubble" of the "Knife Edge," that the most daring climbing of all is encountered. Here the abruptness of the walls renders progress difficult and one must work his way over and among the rocks with great care, as a false step might plunge him hundreds of feet below. But the thrill of the "Knife Edge!" Its difficulties only add zest to the climb.

It required two hours to traverse the "Knife Edge," from Pomola to South Peak, and another half hour was required to reach Monument Rock on Summit Peak, the goal of all climbers.

What strange emotions stir within one as he stands on Summit Peak for the first time and surveys the scenes about him! How can one describe the grandeur of this view? Whose pen or brush can do it more than scant justice? What poet, however inspired, can interpret it? Eastward, southward, westward, as far as the eye can see spreads the great primeval forest of Northern Maine, with scores of silver lakes nestling peacefully in its bosom. To the north and northwest a far-flung chain of mountains, blue and mysterious, beckon to the explorer. Save for a few clearings far to the east and south, scarcely discernible in the distance, the scene is not different from what it was a thousand years ago.

Climbing up Through the Boulders Along the Dudley Trail, Mt. Katahdin; The Saddle and Basin Slide in the Right Background

But what is time to Katahdin? This is the touchstone of eternity. Ten thousand years pass over Katahdin's stony brow, the blizzards of ten thousand winters lash themselves in fury about his hoary summit, nations rise and fall, the world is shaken by conquests without number, Pharaohs, Caesars, Napoleons and Wilhelms have their day, new discoveries and inventions revolutionize the habits and lives of men, yet Katahdin the Eternal heeds them not.

Here, far from the abodes of men, far from the strife and turmoil of a busy world, one may come and forget time, forget who he is and whence he came, and for the time being become a true child of nature, as free and untrammelled as the moose and deer that roam in yonder forest. What a pity it is that every lover of nature, every seeker after peace and recreation of mind and body, is not privileged to come to this sanctuary of nature and partake of its sacraments.

But the trip to Summit Peak which I have attempted briefly to describe is only one of many delightful jaunts about Katahdin. One may spend weeks in this great wonderland of the North Woods, hiking over many trails, scaling the rocky precipices, exploring the less frequented parts of the great mountain, searching for the hidden beauties of the little known mountains to the north, fishing in placid lakes and rippling woodland streams, roaming through shady forests of spruce and balsam, forming the while an intimate fellowship with Nature, the mother, generous, kind, giving unstintingly of her limitless store of blessings to her children who come seeking solace and surcease from the weariness of an artificial world.

OUR WILD NORTHEAST IN MAINE

A Chapter Which Gives Some Facts and Figures That Contradict Its Title.

BY JIM LOWDER

BECAUSE I spent my vacation in Maine and the nomenclature of the state is mostly Indian, some person with a soul steeped in iniquity has seen fit to have a lot of fun about it. Scurrilous remarks have been heard in the sacred precincts of our Club and the author of them has even seen fit to air his opinions. I'm strongly inclined to believe it's Ole Bill Eaton, and the only reason that I don't eat him at sunrise some morning is that I fear indigestion. But personalities aside. Let me tell you a few things about the State of Maine.

Most everybody concedes that the march of progress started in the east and had its general trend westward. Yet today we find places in the Pine Tree State, the United States' most eastern point of land, which are wilder and more primitive than even in the farthest west. There are spots in Maine that are more unsettled than the Imperial Valley, the southwestern corner of the nation.

A Typical View on Eagle Lake, Fish River Chain,
One of the Hundreds of Beautiful Aroostook Basins

And still you can go within tramping distance of these very spots in Maine in all the luxury of a Pullman sleeper. The railroad, conceived in the minds of a few brilliant men who saw the possibilities of a country where the jaded minds of Wall street and other busy marts might find rest and recreation, is built right into the heart of the sporting country. Of the commercial advantages of this road, and it is apparent that it must perforce have many, I shall say nothing, for this is a defence, not an advertisement.

I took a 200-mile ride in the cab of a locomotive on that road while up in Maine this last summer, and I never have seen anything to rival the scenery that met my eyes from that engine window. And up in that country they hang a legend on every river, mountain crag and lake. The woods are full of them.

The state and particularly the Aroostook country, where the game trails lead, is rich in romance. The mystery of miles upon miles of unexplored woodland, the mountain peaks that rear their heads into the clouds and the streams that tumble through the valleys and spread peacefully out in the meadow lands, all have contributed to the fascinating history that makes Maine one of the most interesting states in the Union.

I gossiped an hour or so with an engineer while I was HOME in August. He told me that on request of the state game commission he had kept track of the game he had killed in one season with his locomotive. There were four moose, one bear and seventeen deer. Does that sound as if there is any dearth of big game in the Maine northland?

The Aroostook country stretches forth practically 15,000 miles, much of which is an unbroken wilderness. Is there any reason why it should not be a great game land? And fish? Why, there are streams up there that have never wet a fisherman's line. Of course they are not easily accessible, but what sportsman minds a little inconvenience when he may catch fine, big, gamey trout, landlocked salmon, togue and "muskies", to say nothing of the fighting bass and pickerel that literally infest these waters?

Don't get the idea that Maine is all woods. Millinocket, sometimes called the "Magic City", is an ample demonstration of what enterprise can do in a wilderness. Millinocket has the greatest paper mill in the world, and it sprang up like a mushroom, its history rivalling that of many boom towns of the west. But the difference between that city and a western boom town is that Millinocket is there to stay, as long as the world needs paper and there is pulp wood in Maine. And there is enough forest there to last, with conservative cutting, for centuries.

I do not think Maine's wonderful coast line or beautiful Casco, Penobscot or Passamaquoddy bays should be passed without a mention, but I fear that I am usurping space that I should not.

My humble footsteps in Maine have followed those of such men as Longfellow, whom we all know was born in Portland; Mark Twain, who took the famous train from Oldtown to Mt. Katahdin and back; Thoreau, who devoted a volume to the joys of the Maine Woods and wrote a real classic about the ascent of Mt. Katahdin; Holman F. Day, who has put a lot of the Maine legends into verse, and James Russell Lowell, who was an author of an essay on traveling about Moosehead Lake.

From one of the peaks of Mt. Kineo on Moosehead you can toss a pebble into the waters of the lake, 1,750 feet straight down. The bottom of the lake at the foot of this abrupt side of the mountain has never been reached by a sounding line. The geological theory that it is the crater of an extinct volcano seems highly plausible. But imagine looking over the edge of the mountain absolutely straight down for nearly two thousand feet. Guess you might be convinced that all of Nature's wonders are not in other states.

Why go on and enumerate the charms of Maine? Poke all the fun you want to at the names borne by the streams, lakes or mountains. They were mostly named by Indians, who followed a rule of naming an object after an incident directly in connection with it. Do all the "kidding" or criticising you want to, but when you want real sport, real life, real scenery and real everything, go to Maine. There is more real joy there than any other place in this w.k. world. Believe me, me for Maine.

THE FISH RIVER CHAIN OF LAKES

*The Up-North Aroostook Waters
Where Fishing is Always Fine.*

THE Fish River chain of lakes are among the most popular of the waters which have more recently come into prominence in the Aroostook country. They comprise on the North branch, Long Lake, Salmon Lake, (sometimes called Mud Lake) Cross Lake, Square Lake and Eagle Lake; Main Fish River branch, St. Froid Lake, Portage Lake, and Big Fish Lake.

Square Lake, which is about the center of the chain, is, without doubt, one of the most beautiful lakes in Maine, it is really in the big woods without a clearing, burnt land or opening visible anywhere around its 48 miles of shore line, except the clearings where Inlet Camps and Square Lake Camps are located.

Square Lake has coarse sand bottom, and is the Fish River home of the land-locked salmon. All lakes on Fish River have salmon, also trout and togue, but there is no doubt that Square Lake yields more salmon every season than all other Fish River lakes combined.

The Fish River system, comprising eight large lakes, and rivers varying in length from one-half to eight miles long which connect them, gives the sportsman a total canoeing distance of about 100 miles before reaching Fort Kent, at the mouth of Fish River.

A very interesting canoe trip is to leave Square Lake, say at Inlet Camps, going across Square Lake, through the thoroughfare connecting it with Eagle Lake, down Eagle Lake to the foot where it empties into Fish River, down Fish River to Fort Kent, then follow the beautiful St. John River to Frenchville where the canoes are taken out and hauled to St. Agatha, four miles. St. Agatha is at the head of Long Lake, where the canoes can be put in again and from there the cruise continued down Long Lake, through Salmon and Cross lakes, through the river connecting Cross and Square lakes, back to the starting point, Inlet Camps.

The scenery on this trip has no superior, if any equal, in Maine. The sportsman has all the change of canoeing of lake and river, with some fast water on Fish River between Eagle Lake and Fort Kent, where he will also find two very beautiful falls, one two miles above Fort Kent, the other in the village of Fort Kent.

There's Fine Bathing in Aroostook Waters — This Picture Is at Eagle Lake

Neither of the falls is very high, and if one has a good guide they may be run with a canoe. Fort Kent has the distinction of being the most northerly town, (not the most northerly point) in the Union, and of being one of the stragetical points during the Indian warfare and boundary settlements. The old block house built some hundred years ago is still in a good state of preservation. The St. John River at Fort Kent forms the international boundary, and here may be found many of the descendants of the Acadians who were exiled from the land of Evangeline.

Following down the St. John to the little town of Frenchville, there is as before mentioned, a haul of four miles to St. Agatha at the head of Long Lake. Here at St. Agatha, and the little neighboring town of Acadia, Holman Day lays the scene for one of his most famous works, "The Red Lane."

Long Lake is the largest of the Fish River lakes, being twenty miles long, and about six miles wide. One side of the lake is practically all under cultivation, and the scene back from the shore is beyond description, farm land, woods, water, sky and clouds combining to make a picture which must be seen to be appreciated.

From Long Lake, Salmon Lake is reached through a short river, one-half mile in length; this lake is the smallest of the Fish River chain, being only three miles long, its shores are wooded all around and there is good fishing for salmon in this lake.

A short river two and one-half miles long leads into Cross Lake, which is eight miles long. This river is bridged by the short State highway between Caribou and Fort Kent. From the foot of Cross Lake is a thoroughfare one-half mile long which flows into Square Lake.

Sportsmen coming to Fish River lakes on the north branch, either by railroad or automobile, follow the short State highway to Cross Lake, where power boats from the two camps on Square Lake meet them. Although Square Lake is in the woods, and but sixteen miles from the tip end of Maine, it is still one of the most accessible fishing, hunting and vacation spots in the state. It is only sixteen hours by rail from Boston to Stockholm, (11 miles from landing on Cross Lake) with through Pullman and dining car service. Autos meet trains at Stockholm, power boats meet autos at landing, making only about eighteen hours from Boston to camps on Square Lake.

The lover of the outdoors will find Square Lake to have more grandeur and beauty than can be found on any of the smaller lakes or ponds, there is no dry kye, as it has never been flooded, no burned land, no clearings, (except the two camp sites). It is just as nature left it, green to the water's edge. There are trails over hills, through valleys and along the shores of both Square and Cross lakes, canoeing on river and lake, bathing in the swimming pool and in shoal waters with hard sand bottom.

One of the Birch-Fringed Shores on Eagle Lake

Around camps on Square Lake one may see many different species of birds, and water fowl, and deer are seen almost any day, particularly during the hot months, on the shore of the lake, or in the river between the lakes.

From time ice breaks up until about July first, any party staying at Square Lake for a week, and employing a competent guide is sure of a good catch of salmon, running from two and one-half to ten pounds. The Inland Fish and Game Commission of Maine is stocking the Fish River system with fish every year. A guest at one of the camps remarked last spring, "I have fished Fish River waters for over thirty years, and have also fished in many other parts of Maine, and I can truthfully say that Square Lake stands out as the only place I know of that the salmon fishing is better to-day than it was twenty years ago."

The branch called the main Fish River starts at Big Fish Lake, that is, Fish Lake is the upper lake; there are numbers of brooks, with small ponds and lakes on them all, coming into Fish Lake. Fish Lake is about five miles long, and is studded with small islands, and on one of these is Zella Isle Camps which are beautifully situated, surrounded by beautiful scenery, and from which some good fishing may be had.

Leaving Fish Lake and going about a mile you come to "Round Pond," well named as it is nearly round, being about one mile each way. There is some good fishing there, too. At the foot of Round Pond there are very pretty falls, about twenty feet in height. From the falls to Portage Lake, fourteen miles, the river will furnish lots of thrills, as there is some very quick water, and the canoeist must be always on the alert. There is also smooth water. The fishing is fairly good.

Portage Lake is about eight miles long and from three and one-half to four miles wide. There are two sets of public camps on this lake and a great number of private camps. Portage Lake has exceptionally good trout fishing and numbers of good trout streams may be reached from there.

From Portage to St. Froid Lake, eight miles, the river winds in and out, with some beautiful bits of scenery 'round each bend. St. Froid Lake, nine miles long, has some noted rivers flowing into it, one of which is Red River; this river is fed by some twenty-eight ponds and streams. Birch River also flows into St. Froid and it has a number of ponds on its head waters.

From St. Froid to Eagle Lake a river two and one-half miles long runs between high banks all the way and there is good fishing. Eagle Lake one of the largest of the Fish River chain, is noted for its salmon fishing. Eagle Lake Camps comprise one of the best set of camps in Northern Maine.

Anyone looking for fishing, hunting, rest or recreation cannot make any mistake to come to the lakes of the Fish River system, for at any place along its lakes, rivers or ponds there are scenery, pure air and water, any number of different kinds of birds, and game in abundance. In fact there is everything that makes out-door life, THE LIFE. In this section the sportsman may be assured of modern camps with all the woods surroundings, and home comforts, good food and restful beds.

The Old Block House at Fort Kent, Reminder of a Near-War and a Relic in Which all Aroostook Takes Pride

AROOSTOOK'S HISTORIC RELIC

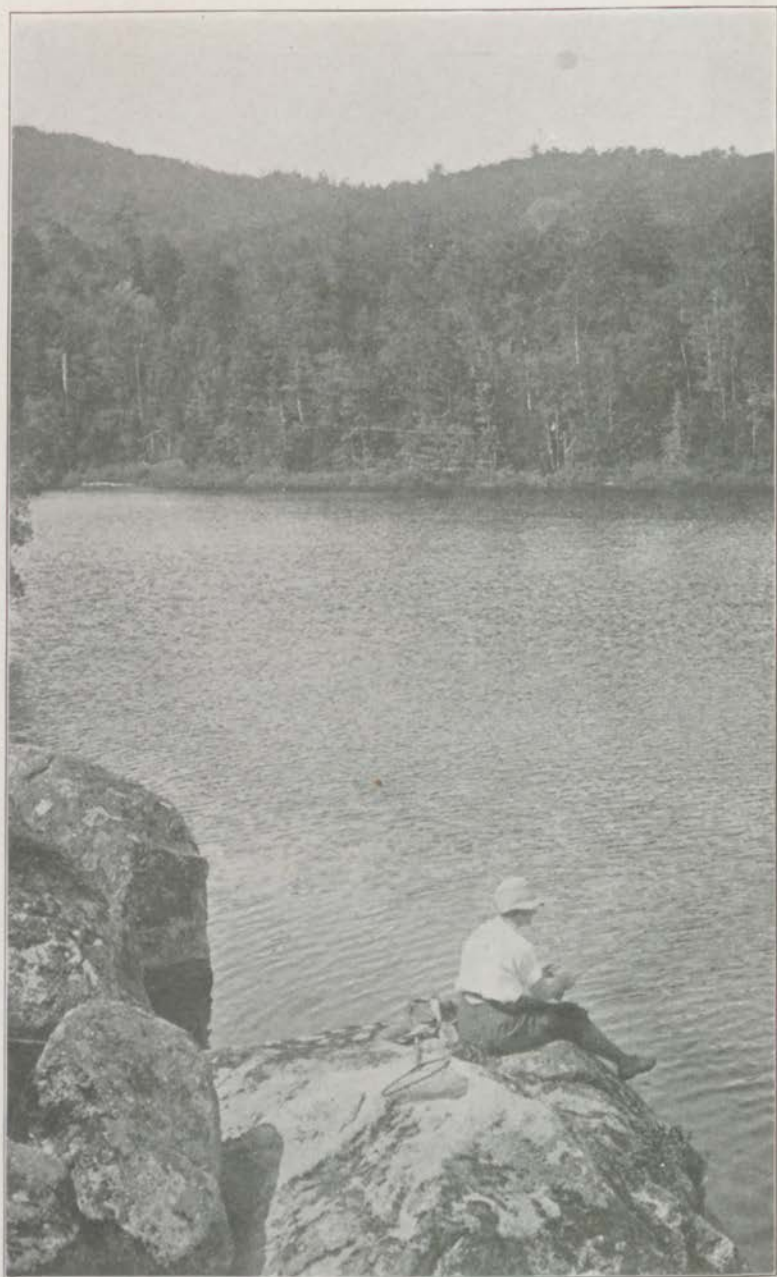

THE old block-house at Fort Kent is one of the historical landmarks in which the entire Aroostook country takes pride. It is a relic of the stirring days nearly a century ago when not only this northerly section of Maine but the state and the nation were aroused over the animosities resulting from disputes over lumbering rights and boundaries between the United States and Canada.

Feeling ran high and the movement of troops on both sides of the St. John River might have made the "Aroostook War" as the fracas is known in history, a real conflict. Bloodshed was prevented by cooler heads and finally arbitration, resulting in the Webster-Asburton Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, ironed out the difficulties and peace, yet undisturbed, again reigned.

There are many romantic chapters in the history of the Aroostook country. The settlements along both banks of the St. John River by the Acadians — kinsfolk of Evangeline — following their banishment from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shores of the Bay of Fundy, the coming of the sturdy Swedes to build towns in the wilderness, the springing up of great industries like the paper mills at Millinocket and the well-nigh magic development of the soil by pioneer tillers which has made Aroostook the foremost potato-growing region — all these have stories that make high-color portrayals of intrepidity, indomitable faith and un-failing industry — characteristics of the pioneers of Aroostook as they are of the pioneers the world over.

MOOSEHEAD-MAINE'S LAKE MAGNIFICENT

THE distinction of being the largest fresh-water lake wholly within the boundaries of the United States is decidedly worth-while — and that's what Moosehead lake is. But Moosehead — 40 miles long, 20 miles wide and with a shore line of 500 miles — has boasts other than its size. First, at least in the viewpoint of the hundreds of fishermen who yearly visit their favorite retreat, Moosehead deserves most fame for the fine sport its big and gamey fish provide but for many others Moosehead suggests delightful vacation days in surroundings unsurpassed for scenic charm and for variety of attractions. Moosehead is a beauty spot extraordinary. Almost surrounded by mountains which afford an imposing and picturesque setting for the vast basin, Moosehead displays its changing beauties as the seasons progress. Whatever the time of year, Moosehead always is resplendent but perhaps it is in its autumnal garb of many shades and colors that it calls forth the most enthusiasm.

Moosehead is no new-comer upon the stage of popularity. Even in stage-coach days it was a favorite vacation-spot and Thoreau and James Russell Lowell are only two of its distinguished devotees. Reaching Moosehead in those days rumbling and jouncing over roads that would now be regarded as hardly more than "trails" offers a striking contrast to the ease and comfort which are enjoyed by the visitors of today. An interesting reflection, too, is the comparison of Moosehead with its one or two meagre little taverns with the Moosehead of today with its magnificent Mt. Kineo House, its Squaw Mountain Inn — to mention only two of the hotels — and its numerous “camps” some of which are the finest in the Maine woods. Beside many resorts, on the shores of Moosehead are located summer schools and camps for girls and boys and a more ideal location is hard to imagine.

Greenville Junction, where the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad touches Moosehead, is still the favorite entrance to this region of vacation attractions and natural splendors just as it was in the early days of Moosehead's popularity when stage coaches offered conveyance to Moosehead's shore. There are many delightful excursions to be had around Moosehead from Greenville Junction to Northwest Carry and there are opportunities for spending a day or two at the different points which are so popular with the regular comers to Moosehead.

To be appreciated to the fullest, Moosehead should be known from end to end and this is easily possible through the good steamboat service on the lake. The Bangor & Aroostook Railroad runs to the shore of Moosehead at Greenville Junction making connections with boats of the Coburn Steamboat Company. At Greenville Junction, 91 miles from Bangor and a junction point of the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad with the Canadian Pacific Railway, there is the Piscataquis Exchange hotel, outfitting stores, and other establishments of interest to sportsmen and persons on vacations. Greenville Junction, and Greenville, a mile away, for many years have been important centers for canoeists, fishermen and hunters.

A mile and a half from Greenville Junction, on the shore of the lake, is Squaw Mountain Inn, which is gaining popularity each season. It has many attractions for its guests. It can be reached from Greenville by automobile, over a good road, or by motor boat. Squaw Mountain Inn is picturesquely situated and is a good “base” for the numerous vacation trips around Moosehead. Just beyond the Squaw Mountain Inn is Hartford's Point where is located the Miller camp, a well-liked resort for fishing and vacations.

The Coburn Steamboat Company's boats give unusually good service on Moosehead, and not until the full steamboat trip from Greenville Junction to the head of the lake, 40 miles away, is enjoyed has Moosehead been seen. There are two routes for the steamboats. One runs straight up the lake to Northwest Carry, or Seboomook as it is now popularly known, and the other is to Lily Bay, for years one of Moosehead Lake's most important stations both with sportsmen and with companies that carry on lumbering operations on Moosehead's shores. Lily Bay is widely known among hunters because of its many years' record for big game shipments.

Capen's, the popular resort on Deer Island which has long been one of the landmarks on Moosehead is the steamboat's first stop after leaving Greenville Junction, on the trip up the lake. Besides the hotel there are numerous outlying cabins for the guests.

Mt. Kineo House, famous among the great inland water resorts, is 20 miles from Greenville Junction. The resort is on a peninsula which makes into the lake from the base of Mt. Kineo, a picturesque peak of solid flint which springs from the surface of the lake.

Mt. Kineo and its flint, legend says, was known to the Indians throughout this section of the land. Redskins came by canoe from far-distant points to secure the flint for arrowheads, hatchets and other primitive utensils of war and domestic use. The fact that at many points throughout Maine and Canada, Indian implements of Kineo flint have been unearched is good evidence of Kineo's importance to the aborigines.

Kineo has become the most famous fresh water resort on the continent. In addition to the handsome hotel, there are cottages, the yacht club, the golf club and bridle paths, expensive lawn; and the numerous mountain trails which contribute to the completeness of the resort.

Across the lake and directly opposite the Mt. Kineo House is Rockwood, also called Kineo Station and here the Maine Central Railroad touches Moosehead's shores. From Rockwood, one of the Great Northern Paper Company's famous forest automobile highways stretches through the woods to Seboomook, whence it runs on to Canada Falls, 27 miles distant, and to Russell Stream, 60 miles away. Both these points are widely known for their fishing and for the big deer which are found thereabout.

West Outlet Camps conducted by Frank A. MacKenzie and located 24 miles from Greenville Junction, have long been one of the favorite Moosehead Lake resorts. They are a regular stopping place for the Coburn boats. From Rockwood the boats make for the head of the lake.

At the end of one of Moosehead's arms is Northwest now generally known as Seboomook, starting point for the West Branch, Allagash and other canoe trips. Only a few miles down the West Branch from Northwest Carry is Lobster Lake, one of the most beautiful basins, and there are numerous other places nearby which are favorite spots with fishermen and hunters. The trip down the West Branch to Lobster Stream, and then up the stream to the lake, is a delightful side trip.

One of the largest and best known Moosehead inlets is Lily Bay. Leaving Greenville Junction, steamboats continue up to the lake for half a dozen miles and then leave the uplake route for a turn into the bay. The first resort is Meservey's camps on Sugar Island, 3 miles from the Junction, with a long record of popularity wholly deserved because of the fine fishing and for the reason that the camps have been ideally located for a vacation center. Their picturesque location and the general satisfactory surroundings have won many enthusiastic friends. After passing Sugar Island another mile brings the steamboat to the camps of the Nighthawk Club.

Twelve miles from Greenville Junction is Lily Bay long known to fishermen, hunters and lumber operators. Lily Bay has its own attractions because it is the entrance to a widely famous vacation section. From Lily Bay there is the splendid automobile road leading past Kokad-jo, First Roche Pond, on through the woods for 23 miles to Ripogenus, where is located the gigantic dam of the Great Northern Paper Company which attracts many sightseers for the reason that it is one of the great storage basins of the world.

Moosehead, to summarize, has attractions for fisherman, hunter, canoeist, nature-lover, hiker, mountain-climber and for the ever increasingly numerous group of men and women who seek no special diversion but are simply "on a vacation." And Moosehead never fails to please.

Headed Down Stream On A Canoe Cruise

CANOEING IN MAINE WOODS WATERS

The Celebrated Cruises Thru Forest Lakes and Streams.

THE Aroostook country offers vacation attractions in great variety — fishing, bird-shooting, big game hunting, camping, hiking, mountain-climbing — all these — and canoeing. Devotees of each of these woods recreations doubtless claim supremacy for their favorite but if a canvass were made it is more than probable that the leader would be canoeing. This is not surprising when are considered the unequalled opportunities offered by the Aroostook country. There are many canoe trips, leading through wooded waters and opening up unsurpassed beauties of forest and mountains and lakes and rivers. The four big canoe cruises which have contributed so largely to Aroostook's fame as a vacation land are:

The Allagash cruise, 210 miles.

The East Branch cruise, 118 miles.

The West Branch cruise, 80 miles.

The St. John River cruise, 231 miles.

Reference to the table of canoe trip distance on another page will give detailed figures of these and other shorter trips.

It is easy to understand the increasing popularity of the Aroostook canoe cruises. Not only do they offer the particular delight of canoeing, itself, but they also provide exceptional opportunity for the other irresistible lures of the woods — luncheon ashore around the camp-fire, camping, hiking, trying the luck in fishing waters, and overland sidetrips to make possible a climb of Mt. Katahdin.

Convincing evidence of the popularity of the Aroostook canoe trips is the increasing number of men and women and young people who regularly plan for a canoe cruise as the outstanding vacation event. Thanks to the wellnigh perfect system among guides, camps, hotels and outfitters all arrangements will be complete for setting out immediately upon arrival of individuals or parties with the information as to the number of persons, the length of time to be spent and the preference as to itinerary at hand, everything will be in readiness for setting out on the date appointed.

Full information regarding all the canoe trips and suggestions for vacations in the Aroostook country may be obtained from the Passenger Department of the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad, Bangor, Maine.

DOWN THE ALLAGASH

Starting point, Northwest Carry, (Seboomook), Moosehead Lake and at Chesuncook.

Terminus, Fort Kent on the St. John River.

Distance, 210 miles, via Seboomook, 195 miles via Chesuncook.

Time, from eight days to four weeks.

MOST famous of all the forest voyages through the picturesque waterways of the Bangor & Aroostook country is the Allagash trip. Northwest Carry, on the Penobscot's West Branch is the starting point and the terminus is Fort Kent on the St. John River, 200 miles distance. The continuous stretch of fine scenery and the many opportunities for fine fishing in the lakes and streams, make the Allagash trip exceptional, for it provides opportunities for enjoying the pleasures of the real woods vacation that cannot be equaled. Hundreds of men and women and as many more boys and girls acclaim the Allagash trip the premier of all canoe cruises.

Northwest Carry, the starting point for the Allagash trip, is reached by the way of Moosehead Lake, being one of Moosehead's extremities. From the steamboat wharf, canoe parties are conveyed overland to the deadwater below Seboomook dam when the canoes go into the West Branch. For the Allagash trip the canoe goes into the Penobscot's West Branch for a dash of 25 miles to Chesuncook Lake. The "Halfway House," a favorite camping spot if the start is made in the afternoon, is a little more than 10 miles from Northwest Carry. In the second 10 mile course, Moosehead, Ragmuff and Pine streams are passed, and then the canoe enters Chesuncook Lake at the head of which is Umbazooksus Lake.

It is a paddle of a mile over the lake to a carry of a couple of miles. At the carry the canoes are carried overland by teams to Mud Pond, and then there is a mile stretch down the outlet to Chamberlain Lake. Around the dam there is another short carry and then the canoe goes into the stream for a run to Eagle Lake. It is 12 miles over Eagle Lake to the thoroughfares of 2 miles connecting Eagle and Churchill Lakes.

Churchill Lake is 5 miles long and at its foot is Chase Carry, about a mile in length and the canoe enters the Allagash River for 10 miles to Umsaskis Lake. Five miles over the lake and a thoroughfare leads into Long Lake, and then there is another 5 mile stretch to the Allagash River, after which it is a course of 10 miles, bringing up at Round Pond. Two miles over the pond and there is another entry into the Allagash for a 15 mile dash to Allagash Falls. At the falls, the canoe is taken out for a short carry and it goes into the river below the falls. From the falls it is direct going with some strong rapids to St. Francis. The Allagash and the St. John unite 12 miles above St. Francis.

The actual terminus of the Allagash trip is St. Francis but it is often continued down the St. John River to Fort Kent. At St. Francis the Bangor & Aroostook train may be taken to Fort Kent, and thence to Bangor or to other points. There is also railroad connection between Fort Kent and Van Buren, and the trip is interesting as it skirts the borderline and follows closely the banks of the St. John River. The towns on both sides of the St. John River are inhabited largely by French-speaking people who are descendants of the early Acadian settlers. The picturesque villages are so different from typical New England towns they never fail to interest tourists.

From Van Buren it is only a dozen miles to the Grand Falls of the St. John River, widely known as "the Niagara of the East," and well worth the time it takes. They have been much before the public recently because of projected power developments.

For the Allagash trip it is customary to take tent, provisions, cooking utensils and other necessities and then go into camp whenever night or the inclination to get ashore overtakes the canoeist. There are numerous good camping places with clear springs for drinking water, and surroundings that are inviting and there are various camps along the Allagash where provisions may be secured if the supply is running low. If desired, meals and lodging may be had at these camps. They are:

H. M. Bickford's camps at the head of Chesuncook Lake where supplies are furnished. See page 124.

J. T. Michaud's farm, about 2 miles before reaching the Allagash Falls.

What's the expense of the Allagash and other canoe trips? As in the case of a vacation in any locality this depends upon the person. Some people will make the trip with considerable economy, while others will go over the same trip regardless of expense. It is not advisable to take more than one person in a canoe. A guide's charge for one person is $6.00 to $7.00 a day. The canoe, tent, and cooking utensils are supplied by the guide. If a single guide is taken along with two persons his charge will probably be $8.00 a day. Most guides decline to take more than one person in a canoe. The guide's board is paid by the sportsman. This means taking along sufficient provisions and making arrangements for accommodations at terminal hotels for the guide.

The outfitting store at Greenville has had many years of experience in equipping canoe parties. In arranging for supplies, information and details can be secured from D. T. Sanders & Son Co., Greenville.

Most canoeists of experience prefer the latter part of July to the last of September for a Maine woods cruise. Insects are not troublesome then although, of course, water is apt to be lower than earlier in the season. Early fall is a delightful time for an Aroostook canoe trip. The Aroostook woods garbed in autumn array are entrancing. Nowhere can be equaled the gorgeousness of the fall colors which nature bestows so lavishly in this great vacation land. Mountains, lakes and streams present a riot of brilliance beyond description.

THE WEST BRANCH CRUISE

Starting point, Northwest Carry (Seboomook), Moosehead Lake.

Terminus, Norcross, at the foot of North Twin Lake.

Distance, 30 miles.

Time, from four to seven days.

THE West Branch cruise down the waters of the Penobscot River, has long been a favorite not alone because of the comparatively short time in which it can be made, but also because of the many scenic attractions and the many good angling waters easily reached from the main course. The West Branch trip begins at Northwest Carry and is reached from Moosehead Lake.

The canoe goes into the West Branch waters at the carry and it is a picturesque course down the West Branch waters for 20 miles to Chesuncook Lake. About midway on the West Branch, between Northwest Carry and the entrance to Chesuncook, is the Half Way House, which is a favorite camping place, particularly if the start is made in the afternoon. At Chesuncook Lake the canoeist decides whether the distance of 18 miles down the lake will be paddled or whether the steamboat will be taken for the run down Chesuncook and Ripogenus Lakes, which are now one.

At the foot of what was formerly Ripogenus Lake the Great Northern Paper Company has one of the world's greatest water storage dams which makes necessary a carry and arrangements can be made for transporting canoes and dunnage overland. At the end of the carry the canoe is put into the West Branch again at a point known as the Big Eddy. Upper Umbajackamegus

The Canoe Cruises Through Aroostook Waters Give Many Opportunities for Fine Fishing

Falls are encountered shortly and the canoe goes through this quick water, but at the "lower" falls it is necessary to carry for half a mile.

"The Horse Race" is the appropriate name given the succession of swift pitches, about two and a half miles in extent, and if conditions are favorable the canoes generally go through these rapids with passengers aboard. Sometimes the water is so rough as to make the passengers choose the path which runs along the bank, while the guide negotiates the current, and at other times low water makes some extra carrying. At the end of the Horse Race the canoe goes through Sourdnahunk Deadwater to the dam at the foot of Sourdnahunk Stream, where there is a small carry.

Four miles down the West Branch are the Abol Falls and they make necessary another carry. After Abol Falls are passed the canoe goes into a straight course down the river to Pockwockamus Deadwater and then it is clear traveling to Debsconeag Falls, where the West Branch takes a drop of some 30 feet, and these falls make necessary still another carry. At Pasamagomoc Falls there is the last carry of the trip and then there is a clear stretch into Ambajejus Lake.

At the head of Ambajejus Lake steamboats may be boarded for the trip down Ambajejus Lake to Pemadumcook Lake, thence to North Twin Lake to Norcross, the terminus of the West Branch canoe trip where there is a hotel where clothes may be changed and preparations made for the trip home by the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad.

The comparatively brief time needed for the West Branch trip makes it possible for many parties to include a climb up Mt. Katahdin as a part of the program. Katahdin is easily accessible from the West Branch route either by the Hunt or Abol trails and its ascent adds greatly to a woods vacation.

Added to the opportunity for ascending Katahdin the West Branch canoe trip also offers some extraordinary scenery and varied attractions which are hard to equal. There are many opportunities for side-trips for fishing, hunting and camping out along the West Branch cruise on well-known waters like Caribou, Cuzabexis, Caucamgomoc Lake, the Hurd Ponds, Rainbow Lake, First, Second and Third Debsconeag Lakes.

From Third Debsconeag Lake there is a passage at the head of Pemadumcook, and from Pemadumcook can be reached Jo Mary Stream and Jo Mary Lake. The Jo Mary waters have long been renowned in hunting and fishing circles. Millinocket Lake, reached from Ambajejus Lake, is another favorite with fishermen. Two streams which are popular with the anglers are Aboljackamegus and Aboljackamegassiss streams, which flow into West Branch in the vicinity of Abol Falls. A popular side trip on the West Branch cruise is the Sourdnhunk Lake country which is a famously fine trout fly-fishing section.

THROUGH PENOBSCOT EAST BRANCH WATERS

Starting Point, Northwest Carry (Seboomook), Moosehead Lake.

Terminus, Grindstone on the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad.

Distance, 120 miles.

Time, from seven to ten days.

THE East Branch of the Penobscot offers a canoe trip of 120 miles through a region considerably wilder than the territory by the West Branch voyage. Its course covers some famous waters like Chesuncook and Chamberlain Lakes and the succession of pitches known as the Grand Falls of the East Branch. The start is from Northwest Carry and the course is 20 miles down the West Branch to Chesuncook Lake. At Chesuncook instead of turning south down the lake, as in the case of the West Branch trip, the canoe is headed north and leaves Chesuncook by Umbazooksus Lake, thence to Mud Pond Carry and into Mud Pond, which is the first dip into the waters of the East Branch. It is 3 miles over Mud Pond to Chamberlain Lake, and a paddle of 5 miles over Chamberlain brings the canoe to the thoroughfare leading to Telosmis, and after Telosmis comes Telos Lake.

Tolos is a favorite camping place because of the favorable surroundings, and from there side trips are often taken into Sourdnhunk Lake. A canal connects Telos with Webster Lake, and if there is a good pitch of water this will afford a passage to the canoe. From Webster Lake to Grand Falls it is necessary to take out the canoe for a mile overland by tote team. When the canoe goes into water again there is good going to Second Lake, 4 miles long, and for another 4 mile stretch over Grand Lake. From Grand Lake there is a 5 mile run of rough water, which means vigorous paddling, to Stairs Falls, but after the falls are passed there is a smooth run to Haskell Rock pitch, where there is another carry.

The Grand Falls of the East Branch are composed of the series of pitches which are encountered in the next 4 miles. Pond Pitch comes first, then Grand Pitch, the third is the Hulling Machine Pitch, and last is Bowlin Falls. If wind and water conditions are right, the canoe is navigable through the swift current between the pitches, but each of the pitches except Bowlin means a carry. At certain seasons, and under extraordinary conditions it may be necessary to carry around Bowlin, but generally it can be gone through with safety.

From Bowlin for a distance of 15 miles there is good going, which brings the canoe to the point of junction of the Wissataquoik and the East Branch. From the Wissataquoik there is a pleasant side trip up its 16 mile length, and the Sebois, which comes into the East Branch just above the Wissataquoik's place of confluence, follows through a country well known by game. It is only a dozen miles from the mouth of the Wissataquoik to Grindstone but in covering this stretch there are the Whetstone, Burntland and Grindstone Falls to be encountered. Under favorable conditions the canoe can get through without a carry, but unless there is a good pitch of water it is likely that Whetstone will be unnavigable even if the other two are.

Because of its many good fishing waters the East Branch trip is especially popular with anglers. Added to the sport provided by the gamey trout for the real sportsman there is a strong lure to the route which also holds out inducements of plenty of camping places in primeval country.

VOYAGING DOWN THE ST. JOHN RIVER

THE story of the canoe trip down the St. John River, written by Prof. Warren K. Morehead of Andover, for "In the Maine Woods," is still the best brief account of this remarkable cruise through a veritable wilderness.

"'In the Maine Woods' has been very kind to publish for some years my brief narrative of that which is, beyond question, the most interesting canoe trip in the State of Maine. The distances from one point to another have been so frequently published that it is unnecessary to comment on them here. However, I have always thought that a mistake was made in advocating that sportsmen go through the brook at the head of Aboconetic Bog, make a carry of 2 miles, and reach Baker Lake.

A Canoeing Snapshot on Elbow Pond — Barren Mountain in The Background

"Over ten years ago, eleven of us, in 20 foot canoes, made the trip slowly and carefully, and we crossed to St. John Pond, a very wild country, and proceeded down St. John stream to Baker Lake. There is no wilder country than that lying about St. John Pond, the head of the river. Here deer can be photographed and nature observed in its wildest aspect. The stream from St. John Pond to Baker Lake is small, exceedingly wild and very interesting.

"From Baker Lake to some distance beyond the mouth of the Big Black it is very primitive country, and sportsmen are advised to proceed slowly and carefully and reap the full benefit of the journey. Nothing is gained by hurrying through the St. John trip, or for that matter any trip in Maine. Yet there are some persons who hurry through both the Allagash and the St. John voyage, their sole idea, apparently, being to make a record trip.

"The fishing along the St. John is said to be good — it was excellent in the old days. The country lying about the forks, where the South West Branch joins the St. John, is also picturesque and interesting and sportsmen are advised to canoe or pole some distance up the North Branch. The river one descends from St. John Pond is the main St. John, but it is called on the map the South Branch. Parties are advised to go up tributary streams, during the journey, and see beaver dams.

"Big Black will be found attractive country and camp should be established at the mouth of that stream for several days. There are rather bad rapids above the Big Black and others some miles above the junction of the Allagash with the St. John. Parties should proceed through these very cautiously, sending the most skillful canoe-man ahead in the forward canoe. The other boats should hold back until they observe what channel he takes. Many of the accidents in the rapids are due to the 'bunching' of canoes. This could be avoided as indicated."

TO CHESUNCOOK AND THE MT. KATAHDIN REGION BY MOTOR

THE splendid automobile highway from Lily Bay, on Moosehead Lake, to Ripogenus Dam, and beyond built by the Great Northern Paper Company is a popular route with many vacationists. This automobile highway gives an approach to Chesuncook as well as to Ripogenus and beyond by Harrington Lake to the famous Sourdnahunk Stream, which is within a few miles of York's Daicey and Bradeen & Clifford's camps, all of which are in the heart of the Mt. Katahdin country.

Canoeists can take a Coburn steamboat to Lily Bay and from there can go by special auto or by "jitney" to either Chesuncook or Ripogenus Lakes. Here the start can be made for canoe trips. For the Allagash trip, up Chesuncook Lake, or down the West Branch waters, if Mt. Katahdin, the Sourdnahunk country or Norcross are the objective points.

This combination of a canoeing excursion and a mountain-climbing expedition, as offered by the route, via Ripogenus and the West Branch waters, makes an ideal vacation and it is doubtful if the unique offering can be duplicated. It is an extraordinary program which is becoming more popular each season. One of the outstanding developments in recent years as far as vacation schedules are concerned, is the increase in the popularity of Mt. Katahdin and the marvelous country by which it is surrounded. Mt. Katahdin is a veritable vacation paradise, for it provides exceptional opportunities for canoeing, tramping, mountain-climbing, fishing, hunting and the unequalled experience of camping out in a region remote and regal in its isolation.

“KATAHDIN”

Foreword by Hon. Ralph O. Brewster, Governor of Maine.

MAINE challenges comparison with the whole wide world in the production of a peak from which the eye may roam a hundred miles to the horizon in any direction that one may look.

From Katahdin's summit the eye may turn around a six hundred mile circumference embracing practically thirty thousand square miles of lake and wood and stream in what is one of the most magnificent panoramas that the mind of man can dream.

The pioneers of this region have rendered a real service to their fellow-men with the trails they have blazed to vistas that grow ever more alluring as one ascends. The doubling of its visitors this past season indicates its constantly widening appeal.

It is ideally adapted to be the winter sports center of the North American Continent.

Three visits to its summit in the last few years have only served to stimulate my desire to return again.

THE TAMING OF MT. KATAHDIN

Overlord Of a Vast Region Which Provides Vacation Programs A-Plenty.

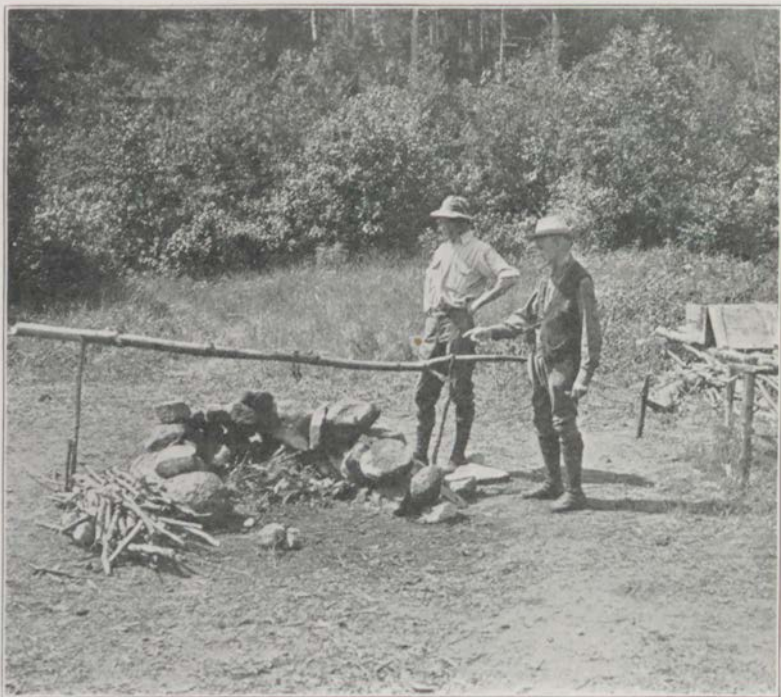

By FREDERIC BULKELEY HYDE, Washington, D. C.

MOUNT Katahdin has at last come into His own. That grim, granite monolith dominating the wilderness of Northern Maine has succumbed to man's efforts; His rugged fastnesses are yielding their age-old secrets, and His fame is spreading to all the world.

Up to recent times few men had climbed this towering sentinel of Eastern America. Its isolation was quite complete and its rocky cliffs repelled all but the hardy few explorers, who, to the beginning of the present century, had conquered its battlements. In days long gone bands of Penobscot Indians, having lost belief in the vengeance of Pomola, that fearsome spirit who lived in Katahdin's wind-blown caves and who withered intruders to his domain with a fiery breath, found enormous herds of caribou roaming there and hunted them for their hides and meat. Thoreau in 1846, with painstaking effort, penetrated the far-flung forest and made the ascent near the Abol slide, only to be turned back from the summit by masses of cloud that obliterated every vantage of the vast table-land.

Katahdin's sway was virtually unchallenged. Down to 1900, save for the Abol slide from the Penobscot West Branch and old lumber workings on the North slope, there was no acknowledged trail, until IRVING HUNT of Staceyville built his camps at the mouth of Sourdnahunk Stream, and searching for an easy approach to the summit, laid out his famous trail to Katahdin's lofty ramparts. To-day, thirty years later, that trail is the easiest and best over the mountain.

Long after HUNT is gathered to his fathers, the HUNT TRAIL

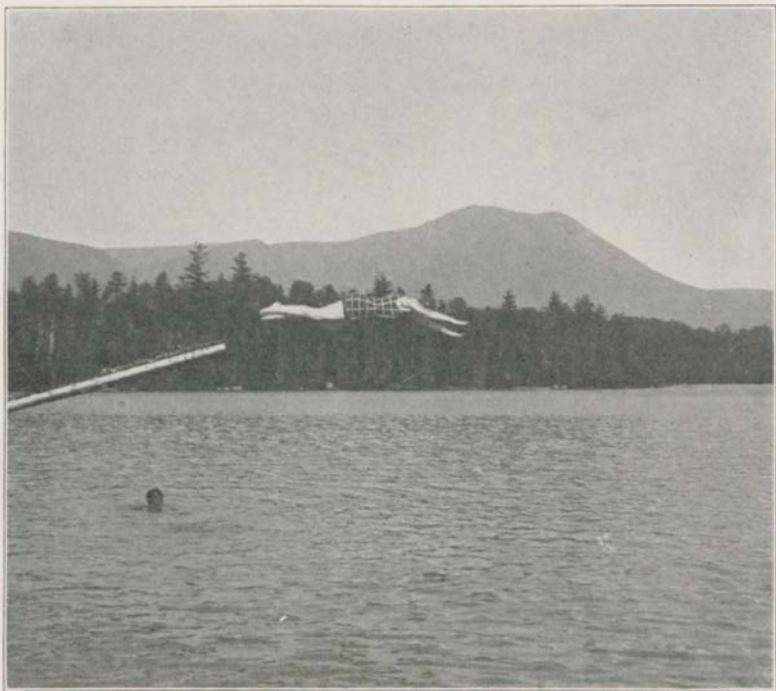

A Typical Boy Scout "Good Turn" — After Camping on The Hunt Trail Up Katahdin The Scouts Swept the Campground, Burned the Trash and Cut Wood for the Next Party will happily recall the veteran guide and woodsman, who with MAURICE YORK, opened the Katahdin country to the world!

And those days of opening up Katahdin's domain were days of back-breaking, blood-sweating toil. The West Branch of the Penobscot River was the only water-way; there were no roads then from the settlements. Every article of camp equipment, of food, had to be brought over the great lakes to the mouth of the river by canoe and by canoe up the navigable reaches of the river to the carries. And there were eight miles of carries! Back and forth, up and down, through the blizzards of early spring and the splendors of late summer, often camping out in the snow at night wherever they happened to be, struggled these men, HUNT and YORK, human pack-horses, to conquer the wilderness and to make things easy for you and for me!

MAURICE YORK has passed on. But his camps remain, and from the doors of his cabins, looking across the blue waters of DAICEY POND, yet held in the grasp of the forest, one sees, as through rising from the very water, mighty Katahdin in all of his magnificence!

Miss Hamlin, Champion Diver of Daicey Pond

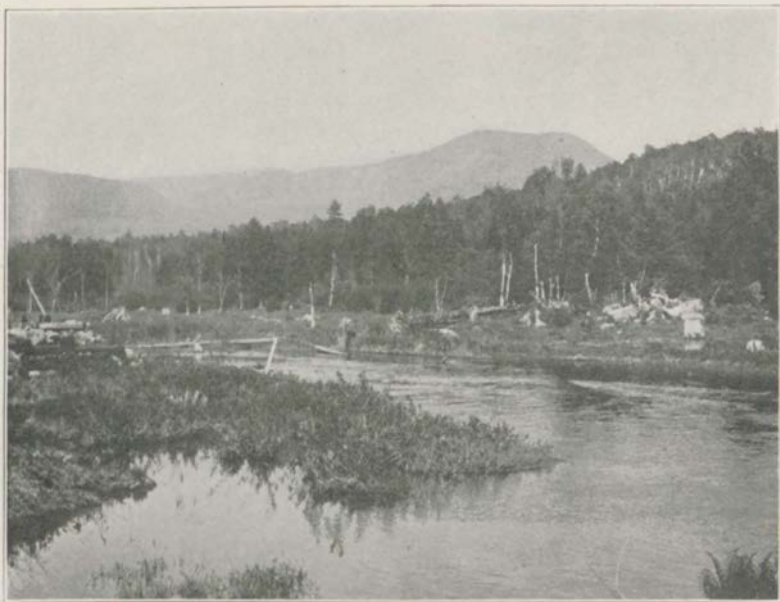

Katahdin is unique among the mountains of North America. From encircling plateau bounded on the North by the forest sweeping to the Canadian border, on the west by Chesuncook Lake, on the South by the Penobscot and on the East by the East Branch of the same river, Katahdin rises to the height of one mile. Its pine and spruce covered slopes cover over eighty square miles, and gently lead the traveller on, ever up, to its masses of huge boulders scattered on its every side a thousand feet below its wide-spread table-land. Here the forest ends, but not so its flora; far aloft, to the peak itself this Alpine growth thrives, this growth of tiny, stunted trees and plants, making it possible, as Thoreau wrote so long ago, — “to literally walk on the tops of the trees.”

From whatever direction the ascent is made it is almost impossible to escape the cliffs and boulders. In places sheer cliffs of over two thousand feet arise to the rim of the table-land; while in others the way may be found among and around enormous rocks. There are deep ravines, dry and rocky, and huge basins on all sides. There are rock slides and over-hanging ledges. And above all on the summit of Katahdin is that vast, rock-strewn table-land, covered as if “the heavens had rained rocks and Titanic boulders.”

Mt. Katahdin from The Toll Dam, Near York's Camp

The top once gained the walking is clean and open. The moss now yields its softness to tired feet; the same moss that years ago roving caribou found their perfect food. The highest peaks can now be seen and their attainment is but minutes away. The scene about is queer and creepy, for one feels quite away from our throbbing world and plunged into another devoid of life; with odd grey shapes around, grey shapes that were old ten million years ago!

On Katahdin's ridges, slides and up its valleys are now other trails, some difficult and dangerous, and others easy and quite devoid of peril. All lead to the same table-land and all are used repeatedly by the mountaineers of to-day. The new era bringing Katahdin to the fore as one of America's greatest mountains, also brings for its future, the Appalachian Club, that famous organization which for forty years has worked in the White Mountains to secure the finest mountain trails in this country.

During the last three years the club members have made reconnaissance trips all over the mountain to check up and take stock of that which is already useful. They have opened up old and new trails; they have marked all approaches to Katahdin with suitable signs and have mapped the entire area. In 1926 Judge Arthur Perkins of Hartford, one of the leading members of the club, made their headquarters at York's Twin Pine Camps, the nearest to the mountain on the Hunt Trail. From there daily trips were made to Katahdin and explorations conducted with a view of opening a new and picturesque way to the table-land via Katahdin Falls.

The State of Maine provides two camps, one in the basin at Chimney Pond, the other on the Abol Slide, both cared for and presided over by a famous woodsman, ROY DUDLEY, who like HUNT and YORK, has opened up by trail and road that wonderful land to the East and North of Katahdin. York also provides a well equipped tent on the Hunt Trail near the timber line where one may spend the night and in the morning make an early start 'over the top.' Early in 1927 the United States Geological Survey plans to send into the country several parties of topographers and scientists to map the entire mountain and to study its formation and geologic story.

Three ways there are by which to come to Katahdin without trouble or discomfort. One by way of Millinocket and by motor to St. John's Camp at Togue Pond. One by steamer and canoe from Norcross up the West Branch to Pitman's Camp and then via the Abol Slide. The last from Greenville by motor to "The End of the Road," by way of Ripogenus Dam, and by buck-board to York's camp on Daicey or to the Camps of Bradeen on Kidney Pond.

* * * * *

Katahdin has at last come into His own. The rigorous struggle to conquer of thirty years ago is almost a memory; the easy present is your to enjoy and the future of Katahdin seems to be secure. Yet in that future, as they are to-day, the names of HUNT, YORK and DUDLEY shall be linked together, forever and inseparably, as pioneer explorers of Katahdin's vast domain!

And so, when a glorious day of mountain climbing has ended, and you sit on the verandah of your cosy little log cabin, gazing out over a sapphire gem set in the wilderness, at the rugged sides of the mountain, bathed in the glowing tones of sunset that change from pink to purple and the deep blue of night; remember then, that on the morrow, the first bit of land of our beloved United States to be kissed by the rays of the rising sun, will be the lofty peak of Mighty Katahdin!

MY TRIP TO KATAHDIN

BY JAMES A. BOARDMAN, ORONO, ME.

(NOTE. Original manuscript, without correction, of a twelve year old boy, relating an experience which he had during the summer of 1925).

LAST summer my father and I went up to a camp on Kidney Pond some six or seven miles from the highest point of Mt. Katahdin. We were about "all in" when we got there because we had tramped eight miles from the end of the road where we had left the car.

We rested a few day at the camp and then started out for the summit. At the end of the first day we stayed at a small log cabin at the foot of Abol Slide.

After supper we sat down on a blanket and as we were listening to the roar of the pines Daddy happened to think that the last time he had slept in this cabin, although he had been up the mountain several times afterward, was twelve years ago when he and my mother went on a trip up the mountain before I was born.

The next morning we started up the slide from which we got a beautiful view. I went into every cave I could find and onto every high rock I could find. When we were only a little ways from the table-land I found a very peculiar sort of cave in which we had our lunch. There was a hole in the top and a sort of cellar underneath, and another entrance on the side.

After we had finished our lunch we journeyed upward and in about an hour we reached the table-land. Here it was very cold, while coming up the slide it was warm. We went on after a while to the spring which is on the table-land. We left our packs here as we intended to go on to the top and didn't want to carry them.

When we were about half way there a thick fog came over and we couldn't see a dozen feet ahead. Then it began to hail and we got under some rocks. When it calmed down we started again and at last I saw the top. But it wasn't the top, I found out as soon as we got there, but a little hill.

James A. Boardman, Son of President H. S. Boardman, of the University of Maine

When we did get to the top we couldn't see a thing because the fog was so thick. It was so cold that I thought I should freeze and I fell down and skinned my knee. There was some iodine in the rock monument which was there just for such a purpose so we were all fixed. I was disappointed because I couldn't look down into the chimney but it helped a little to know that I was five thousand two hundred eighty feet above sea level. It was so cold up there that we couldn't stay any longer so we started down. We had a hard time because the fog was so thick but at last we got to the spring. We didn't go down the way we came up. We went by the way of the cave on "Hunt's Trail." As we got down a way we came to the bowlders, some very large rocks that leads the path in and out, up and down. It was warmer down there but my fingers were so cold that Daddy had to tie my shoestring. At last we came to the cave where we would spend the night with another party that was there. We had our supper, and got into our sleeping bags and I went to sleep looking at the moon.

We started for camp the next morning and arrived there about noon, where we received a hearty welcome.

I had heard Daddy talk of the woods ever since I could remember and I enjoyed my trip greatly and hope to go again next summer.

THE WOODS

*I have no quarrel with the persons who go into the woods to peep and bolanize and name all the birds without a gun. There is fun enough in this world, if properly distributed, to give everybody something. But I am stating a truism when I claim that the man with a rod or gun sees more and feels more in the woods than if he were to go empty-handed. In moments of tense excitement in watching for fish or game one's field of vision is wider and both sight and hearing more sensitive than in any moods of mere passive receptivity to "Nature's teaching." Never is the dawn more miraculous than when the fog first lifts along the reaches of the river and you tie on a favorite fly with chilled, fumbling fingers, light your first pipe of the day, and wade, shivering, into the chuckling water. Never is the divine and terrifying mystery of the dark so close to you as when you are stumbling campward in the twilight along an unknown trail. The woodsman who cannot understand how a man can be panic-stricken by the dark is no woodsman. He lacks a sense of the situation; of the very narrow line that separates, fire, food and shelter from the desperate horror of "a man lost." I helped find one of these men once. He rose up gaunt in the October dusk from a bog back of Spencer Mountain, and waved his arms wildly just as I was holding the rifle on him, taking him for a moose; and I shall never forget how we filled him up with coffee, trout, and venison that night and put him safely on the 'lote road' in the morning. —Bliss Perry in the Atlantic Monthly.*

GAME HAUNTS IN THE AROOSTOOK COUNTRY

The Big Game Country and The Many Opportunities For Bird Shooting.

THE Aroostook country, comprising not only the vast section of the State of Maine which it traverses but also the country beyond the United States boundary and across the St. John River, most quickly and easily reached by the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad, is the hunting-ground offering supreme attractions whether it be birds, deer, caribou or moose that is the lure. For many years Maine deer have been renowned for size and although there is close-time on caribou and moose in Maine, just over the border in New Brunswick, will be found unexcelled opportunity for bringing down the prizes that are protected in Maine.

Hunting in Maine, despite long years of popularity, continues to produce fine prizes and due to the fact that only the fringe of the forest has been crossed, leaving miles upon miles of wooded areas still classed as the "forest primeval" there seems to be no diminution in the supply — not surprising when the favorable conditions for propagation are kept in mind.

Until the present service was made possible by the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad and its connections the Restigouche region was out of the question for most sportsmen because it required so much time and journeying. A night train from New York or Boston, and traveling by the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad brings the hunter at practically all points in the Maine Woods before the close of the next day. If the Restigouche is the objective, the arrival at Van Buren will be in time for midday dinner. The remainder of the day and night can be spent at the Hotel Cyr at St. Leonard, N. B., just across the St. John River, or the Hotel Hammond at Van Buren which makes possible a side trip to Grand Falls, the Niagara of the St. John River. Start may be made for the Restigouche or other points in New Brunswick in good season the following morning.

The Moosehead country, Katahdin Iron Works, Patten, Ashland, the vast domain dominated by Mt. Katahdin, and the lakes reached by the way of Norcross, are still favorites as they have been since the days of the earliest sportsmen. In addition to these older favorites the hunters of today have the more recently developed regions in which are the Fish River chain of lakes and other "farther north" localities. Transportation extension has opened up the unsurpassed hunting grounds in the Restigouche country, and the other game centers between the St. John River and the Bay Chaleur, and for all of these the Bangor & Aroostook is the preferred approach. The Restigouche country is looked upon as an unusually good moose-hunting territory.

Maine moose, long noted for their size and spread of antlers, are now protected by close-time laws, so the only shooting that can be done lawfully is with a camera. A moose snapshot is an interesting souvenir of a Maine Woods vacation.

Maine is supreme for fine deer hunting and Maine deer have always been desired by hunters because of their size, and among the finest hunting trophies are Maine deer heads. Next to deer, come the big black bears, which are multiplying rapidly. Maine bears often exceed five hundred pounds in weight, and notwithstanding their apparent clumsiness, they are crafty and quick to elude pursuers, so that to bring one indicates skill as a hunter. Foxes, red, gray and black, are frequently shot, and bobcat and lynx are not uncommon. Along the shores of streams, mink, otter and fisher are frequently found.

Canoeing parties traversing the waters of the Maine Woods during the summer come upon deer in streams and coves, some canoeists having counted them by dozens during extended cruises. With the departure of summer and the approach of cooler weather, the deer take to traveling. Before the leaves begin to fall, the autumnal dryness prevails and the woods become more or less "noisy." The deer, alert for every sound, takes flight at the rustling of twigs or perhaps the crack of the dry leaves and is off in a twinkling.

Autumn rains in late September and in the first days of October wet down the leaves and underbrush; there is less crackling, and conditions are materially changed. The first snow means even greater advantage for the huntsman on the trail for moose or deer. Then it is easier to know the presence of game and to follow their tracks. Maine bucks weigh as high as three hundred pounds, and no handsomer specimens are to be found. Hunters who come to the Bangor & Aroostook country, like the canoeists, fishermen and vacationists, acclaim the fine sport to be found and the many delights of an autumn outing in the woods.

On another page are the tables of figures showing the amount of game shipments from various stations and gateways. It should be borne in mind that some stations are shipping points for a wide range of game land, while others send down deer shot in the immediate vicinity. Norcross, for instance, receives and ships game for the entire lower Penobscot West Branch country, and Greenville for points in all directions, covering an area of two thousand square miles, and so it is with other sections. In other words, shipment figures do not always do justice for localities which may have several points of departure.

BIRD-SHOOTING IN THE AROOSTOOK COUNTRY

BIRD-shooting under ideal conditions is found in the Aroostook country for partridge and woodcock are abundant in this game country, and there are also snipe, black ducks, mallards, sheldrakes and wild geese. For most bird hunters who come to the Maine Woods, the partridge is the enticement.

The "big woods" partridge is quite another bird from the shy, suspicious, quick-flying partridge which are hunted in the neighborhood of towns or settlements. The partridge of the forest is comparatively tame, but this does not mean he does not provide sport for the hunter who uses his rifle instead of a shotgun. Partridge shooting with a rifle is real sport. It calls for the most skilled marksmanship and is something entirely apart from using the shotgun. A high-powered rifle, if the bird is shot in the body, will naturally blow a partridge into shreds. The sport comes in shooting the partridge in the head, which makes a clean hit, if successful, and means that the bird's body is unharmed. For the woman who wants to try her skill with the rifle, there is no better test than partridge hunting with a 22-calibre rifle, and the woman who can "crown" a partridge is entitled to a badge of merit.

The first two weeks in November offer good partridge shooting over a bird dog. Then the partridge is frequently found in open country, feeding on alders and clover. There is good partridge hunting with a tree dog throughout the bird-hunting season, but this sport is not considered in the same class with wing shooting over a bird dog.

Woodcock hunting is a fine sport in the woods of Maine. The Maine woodcock is the same gamey bird that is known variously in the southern states as the brier-snipe, the swamp-snipe and the goose bird. Wherever found, the woodcock has the same characteristics. No hunter, however well versed in the art, pretends to know the woodcock, but every hunter recognizes woodcock hunting as the premier form of sport.

A Group of Hunters, Their Guides and Their Prizes.

The Maine Woods offer excellent woodcock shooting from the 10th to the 25th of October, these dates being set because of averages covering a period of years. The woodcock is a small bird, hardly larger than the robin. It feeds almost wholly on worms and does its eating at night. In the daytime it is drowsing in the fields and when come upon by the dog is slow to shake off its napping and it is then that the hunter gets his point and prize. Bird shooting will be found from almost any station on the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad, and there is always a choice between near-at-hand or more distant hunting grounds. This variety of locations is one of the big advantages offered by the Bangor & Aroostook country not only for bird hunting but for all sorts of vacations.

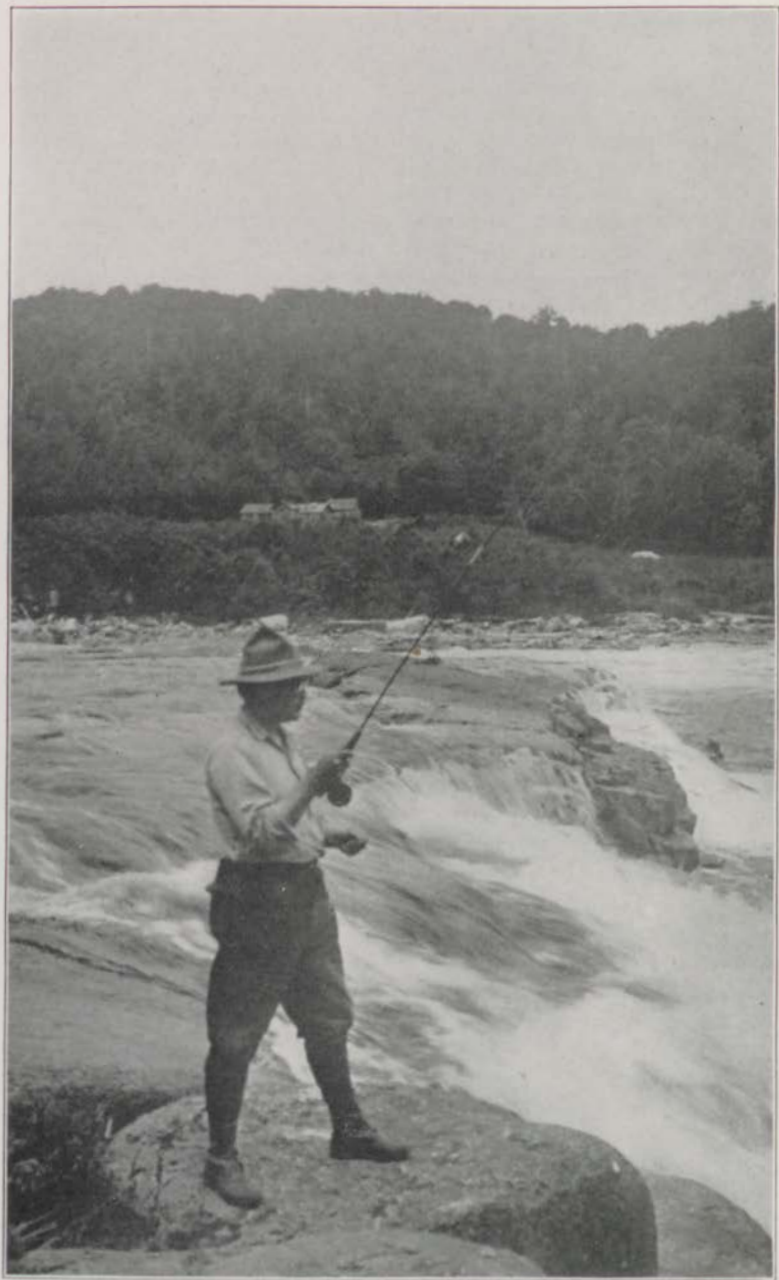

KATAHDIN'S REALM

THERE are many gray rocks on Abol. Mount Katahdin put them there. Katahdin rules over all that West Branch country, a calm despot. Mute, massive, immense, hard-featured, broad-shouldered, nowhere can you get in that country where the broad forehead of Katahdin is not turned upon you. Snow and rain it sends to that region; it floods the river from its flanks; its back cuts off the north wind, making the valley hot; the road of the farmer it has closed, and the way of the lumberman it makes unduly difficult, by sowing the whole country with millions of tons of granite chipped from its sides. From Abol all the way down those many falls, Pockwockamus, Katepskonhegan, called more often Debsconeag, Pescongamac, which we now call Passangamet, and Ambajejus, the river in half a dozen places is choked with these great granite boulders, quarried by the frost from the sides of Katahdin, and by the ice transported all over the country. Katahdin makes all that region what it is; it made the falls, and, indirectly, the backbreaking carries around them; it made the sand on Abol, the first place on the way downstream where you notice clear sand above freshet level; it turned the course of the glaciers and so directed the horsebacks of the glacial drift; it made the Norway pines that grow on the horsebacks, with their hearse-like plumes switching in the breeze like stiff, rustling silk; and it makes all the gray rocks. In this region a "gray rock," or a great "gray," is the accepted synonym for a boulder of Katahdin granite.

AROOSTOOKS FAMOUS FISHING WATERS

*The Lakes and Streams Which Lure The Angler
With the Prizes They Offer.*

THE network of lakes, large and small, countless rivers and brooks, every one a possible prize-producer for the angler, which covers the length and breadth of the Aroostook country, makes this region a veritable fisherman's paradise. Not only is fishing in the Aroostook country the finest of sport but along with this enjoyment, the angler finds abundant opportunity for other vacation diversions—camping, tramping, mountain-climbing and canoeing. Wherever you go in the Aroostook country, whatever station at which you leave the train, immediately at hand or within short distance fishing waters are sure to be found. Recent years have seen many new waters like the Fish River Chain come into fame although they have by no means eclipsed the older favorites like Moosehead, Sebec, the waters in the Katahdin Iron Works region, the lakes and streams in the shadow of Mt. Katahdin, all of which are as popular as they have been for many years.

For the fisherman there are many advantages in the Aroostook country which cannot be matched. Size of fish, length of season, coolness of waters, even in mid-summer, the fine sport in catching the big and gamey trout and salmon which have made this the most famous of all fishing sections are some of the contributing factors to Aroostook's fame with the angling fraternity.

The Fishing Pool at Debsconeag Falls

its record — all the more noteworthy as now Moosehead is only one of the hundreds of waters available to the anglers who come from near and far. There are many new names unfamiliar to the old timers, such as the Fish River Chain of Lakes, far up in Maine's north-most peak. This is a splendid fishing section and is winning increasing popularity each season.

Sebec Lake is famous for its land-locked salmon, and for some of the best fly-fishing for small-mouth black bass in Maine. Schoodic and the waters reached by the way of Norcross, the lakes and streams in the vicinity of Katahdin Iron Works, and various waters in the course of the Allagash, West Branch and East Branch canoe trips offer fine sport.

The Aroostook country has one unique and outstanding angling advantage because there are so many waters that it is possible to find continuous sport from early spring right through the summer until late in September. The spring-fed waters are so cool in many spots that even in midsummer when in most places fly-fishing is a thing of the past, it is possible to enjoy fine angling.

Because of its leadership in size, and the fact that it was one of the earliest Maine Woods attractions, Moosehead Lake rightly heads the list of fishing waters. Through all the years of its popularity Moosehead has never failed to maintain

This Big Prize Was Caught at Hurd Pond

The up-north lakes and streams known as the Fish River Chain of Waters, are an example of this all-season fishing. This fine summer sport, which brings no end of favorable comment, especially from anglers who have been disappointed in waters outside of Maine, is explained by the fact that many of the lakes besides being spring fed are of considerable altitude which means cool water despite the thermometer's high temperature.

Detailed information regarding fishing waters may be obtained from the Bangor & Aroostook's vacation bureau and this service will be found useful whether you are a newcomer lured by the fame of the Aroostook fishing waters or an old timer seeking a change. Give the time of your vacation and you will secure expert advice as to what locality is most favorable.

The royal salmon is the prize supreme for all fishermen. The world over salmon is proclaimed the king of all fish, and the Maine salmon is without peer. There are also togue, black bass, perch and pickerel, and dozens of Maine waters are celebrated for their trout — in many places white perch, pickerel and black bass offer sport scarcely less exhilarating than is provided by the aristocratic salmon and trout.

The fishing season opens with the departure of the ice from lakes and ponds. Fly-fishing continues at its best until summer weather, and in not a few localities even the warmest days find the waters sufficiently cool to make good sport. As summer ends there is fine fly-fishing generally. Each season sees more anglers enjoying the fall sport which is generally regarded to be fully on a par with the Spring fishing. Regardless of your choice of season the Bangor & Aroostook country offers supreme allurements for the angler whether he be novice or veteran.

THE INDIANS OF THE AROOSTOOK COUNTRY

ONE of the romantic touches always of interest to vacationists in the Aroostook country is the occasional meeting with an Indian — mayhap the guide for a canoeing party or perhaps the leader over the trail up Mt. Katahdin. The Indians native to this section of Maine and rapidly passing are members of the Penobscot tribe of the great Abenaki nation which played such a conspicuous part in the days of warfare waged by French and English and redskin. Parkman, the classic historian of those times, has many pages in which the Abenaki nation and its various subdivisions play an important part.

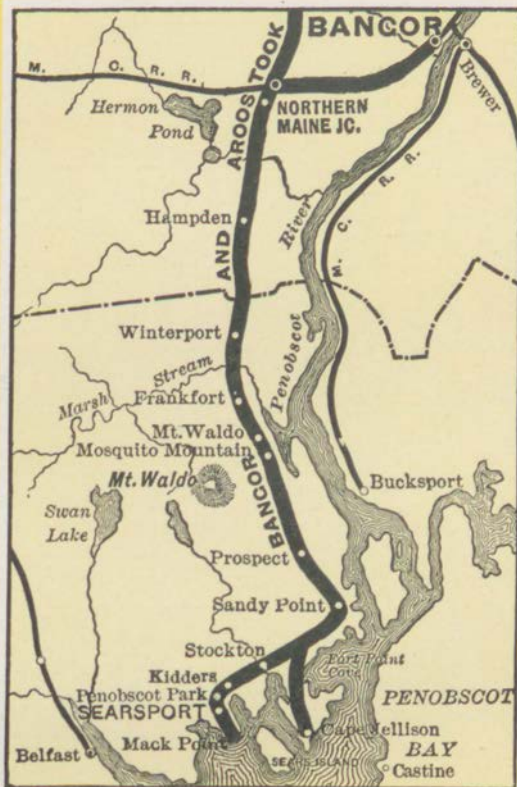

In the days long passed, the Indian used the rivers and lakes and forest streams for their hunting and fishing expeditions, for their passing to Canada and for their summer trips to the sea-coast. Mt. Kineo, on Moosehead Lake, was an important spot for the Indians for there it was that the redmen not only in Maine but from distinct points in Canada and beyond, journeyed regularly to secure stores of flint from the mountainside for use in making implements for domestic use and arrowheads and other instruments for hunting and warfare.

Mt. Katahdin has many legends which have come down from the days when Indians owned and roamed the Maine Woods.

Today the once proud family of Tarratines is represented only by the little settlements at Old Town where they occupy an island in the middle of the Penobscot river which had been set apart as their reservation, and a second reservation, Pleasant Point, near Eastport, on Passamaquoddy Bay. The Indians at Old Town are the Penobscots and those at Eastport, the Passamaquoddies. Both tribes are fast dwindling and inter-marriage has resulted in change of distinctive features and loss of other characteristics.

The Sportsman's Directory

A practically complete list of sporting camps, hotels and fishing waters reached from each station on the

Bangor & Aroostook Railroad

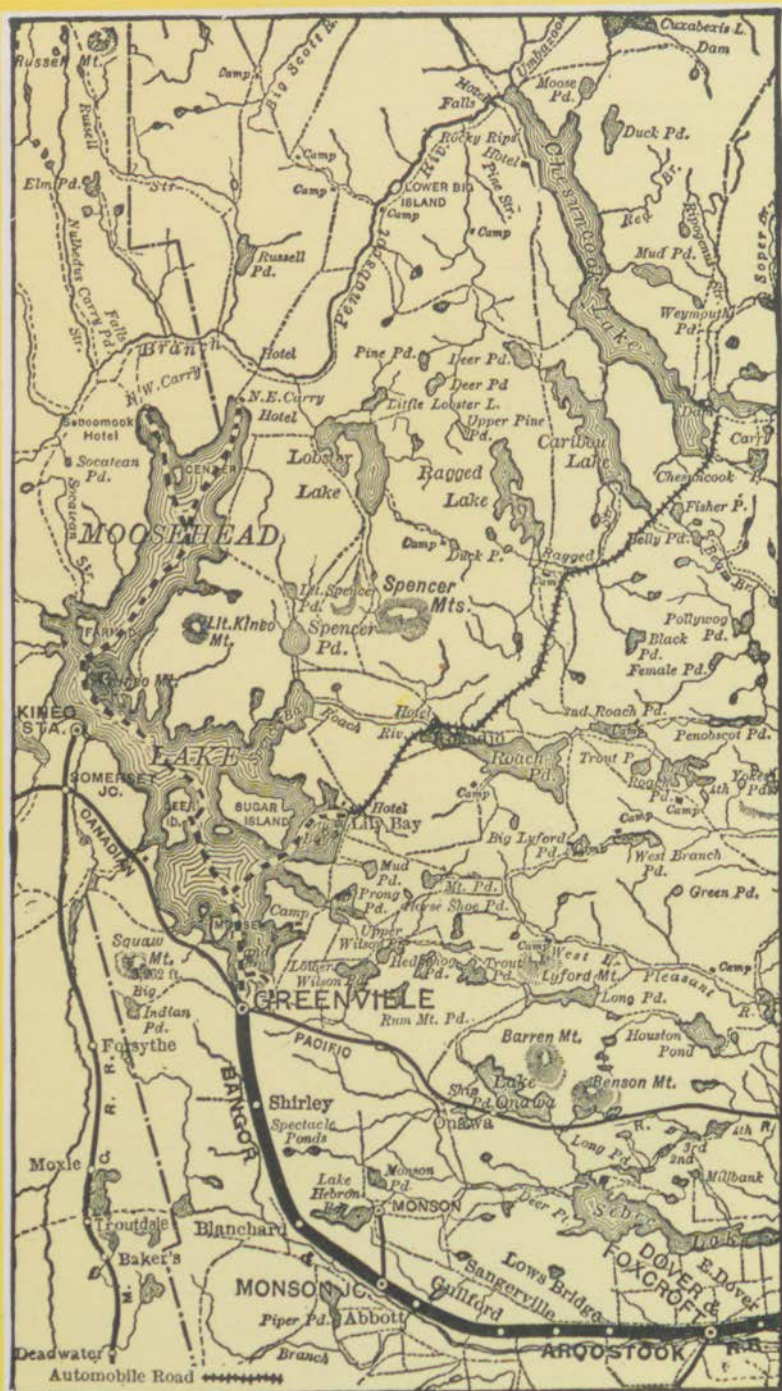

Camps and hotels are numbered to show by comparison with the list of Fishing Waters on what lake, stream or river they are located.

ALTHOUGH the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad is commonly associated with the Maine Woods—the canoeing and fishing waters, the big game country and the vast vacation region in the neighborhood of Mt. Katahdin—all in the big interior of the state, it also is the approach to a stretch of shore on beautiful Penobscot Bay, long popular with salt water devotees. Searsport is the deep-water terminal of the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad which gives direct contact with ocean shipping for the out-going products and incoming supplies of the Aroostook Country. At Searsport and at the adjoining and picturesque harbors of Stockton, Sandy Point and Fort Point are many desirable building locations as well as cottages and homes that may be rented for the summer season.

The foregoing list is compiled for the fresh-water fisherman. Those desiring salt-water fishing should go to Searsport or Stockton. These places, situated on Penobscot Bay, offer the vacationist fishing for cunners, tom-cods, and flounders, and the digging of clams. Deep-sea fishing parties may also be arranged at these places.

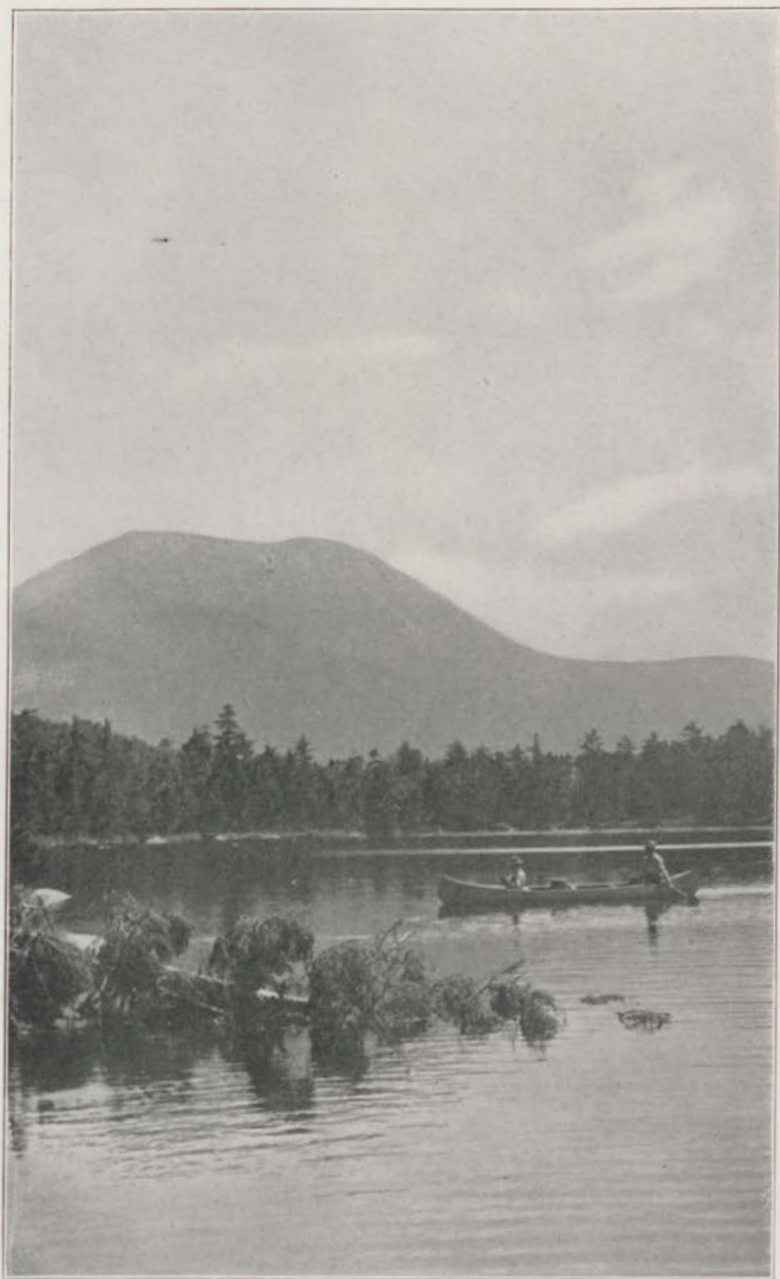

It will be noticed that rates per day or week are not filled in, in several cases, but on account of existing conditions, the hotel and camp proprietors did not feel justified in giving rates for season 1927 so far in advance. Rates, however, will be given upon application, and such rates as are already given are subject to change.

A WORD TO CAMP-OWNERS

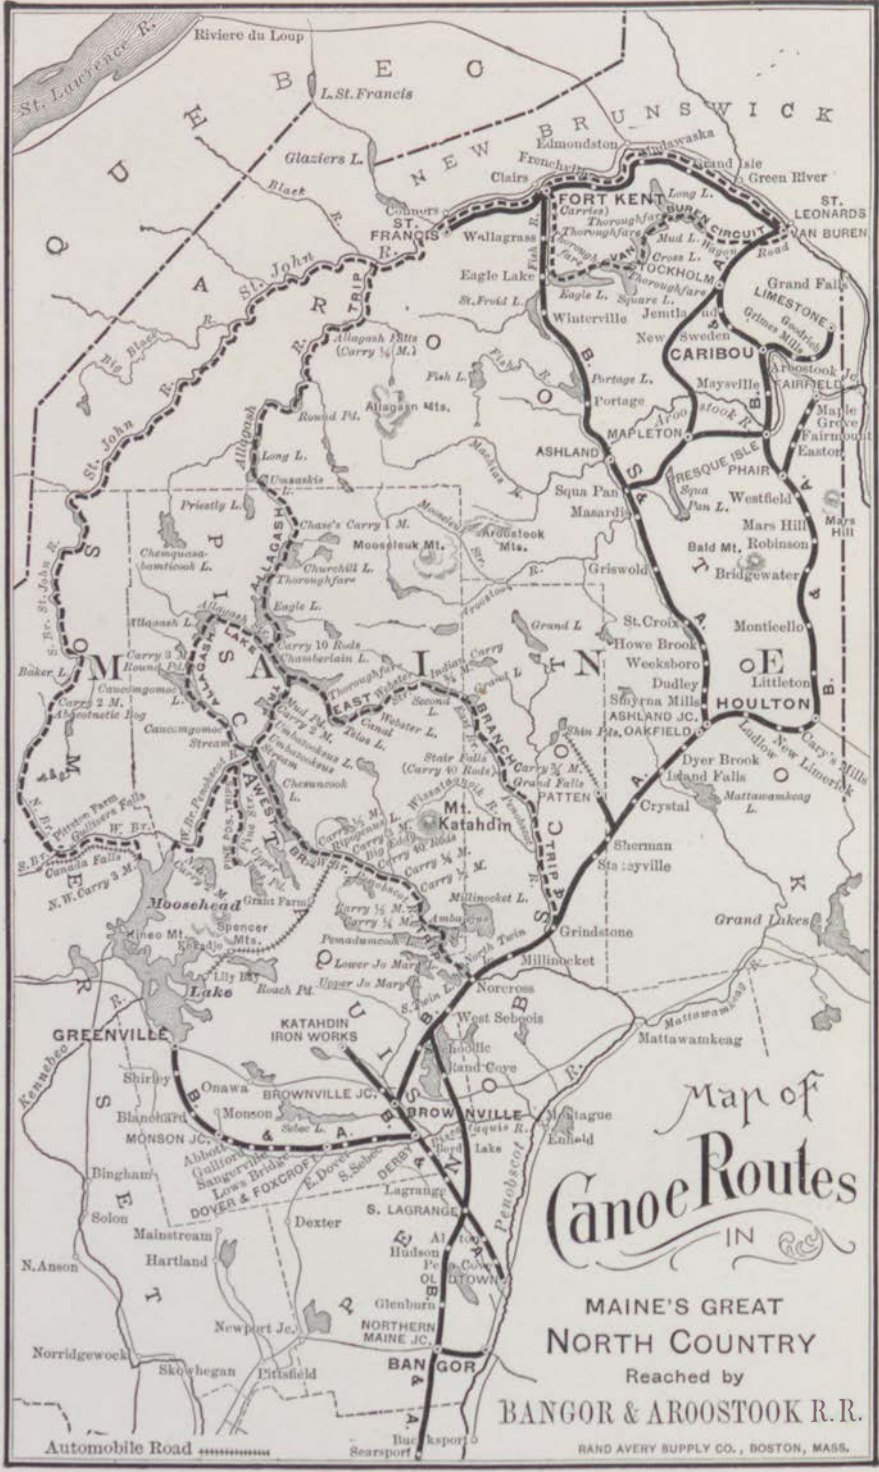

In the spirit of co-operation and for the further development of the Maine Woods as the nation's premier vacation section, it is suggested that camp owners give particular attention to answering inquiries and replying to letters from prospective visitors to Maine. In case camps are already filled, the inquirer should be treated courteously with the idea that later, when accommodations are available, he may become a patron. It is unnecessary to emphasize the importance of fair treatment to all visitors, particularly in regard to the avoidance of over-charges. It is noticeable that the best conducted camps, the owners of which are alert and eager to meet the desires of their patrons and who are equitable in the treatment of all their guests, have the same patrons year after year and these regular patrons pass along the word among their friends so that there is never a lack of patronage. Let's all work together to keep Maine in the lead as the great vacation State.

PHOTOGRAPHS, PLEASE!

To the kindness of our friends who have been so thoughtful in remembering In The Maine Woods with prints of their photographs is due no small measure of the continued popularity of this annual publication of the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad. May we ask for a continuance of this generous co-operation.

AROOSTOOK-LEADER IN AGRICULTURE

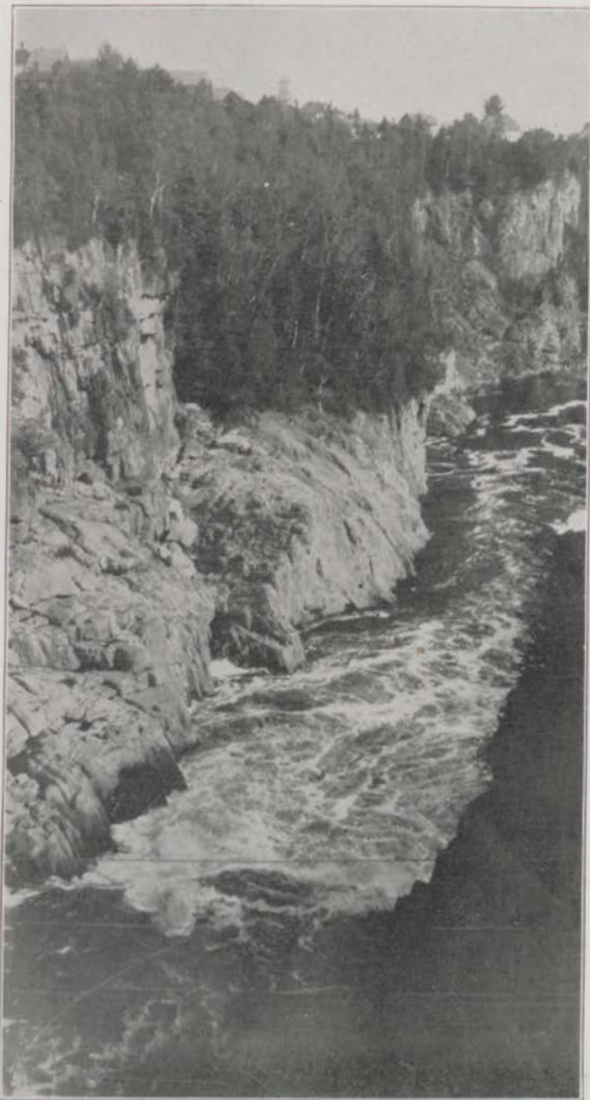

The World's Greatest Potato Section And a Record Producer of Grains.

By MAURICE D. JONES

Farm Management Demonstrator, University of Maine

MAINE has again led the country in the production of potatoes with a forecasted production for 1926 in excess of 37,000,000 bushels. Her nearest competitor is New York with about 31,000,000 bushels. This is the second time in succession that the Pine Tree State has held the banner for the largest potato production in the country. But of greater consequence than this is the fact that in 1924-25 and again in 1925-26, Maine shipped to the consuming centers over one-fifth of the carload shipments made from the thirty-two late crop states. This was thirty-six per cent more than Minnesota, in 1924-25 and was sixty-six per cent more than her nearest competitor for the season 1925-26.

Maine has doubled her potato production since 1900. Her average production for the five year period 1901-1905 was 15,361,000 per year, while in the five year period closing with the crop of 1925, Maine's production was an average of 34,790,000 bushels. Maine ranked ninth in total production of potatoes in the census of 1900, producing at that time 3.6 per cent of the nation's crop. The past season Maine produced 10.3 per cent of the nation's crop and ranked first among the states in total production.

Over eighty per cent of Maine's potatoes are produced in Aroostook County where the crop constitutes the one principal source of cash income for over 6,000 farmers. The big bulk of the crop, however, is produced in a strip of the county approximately twelve miles wide and extending from Houlton in the southern part of the county to Limestone in the northern part of the county. Within this strip is to be found some of the best potato producing soil in the country as evidenced by the fact that Aroostook's average production for the past five years has been 270 bushels per acre. Maine's average yield per acre for the past five years has been 263 bushels and her nearest competitor is Idaho, with 183 bushels per acre.

The tourist who visits Aroostook County, finds broad, rolling fields, broken only by areas of potatoes, hay and grain, the crops that constitute the rotation for the farmers of that county. The business man who enters Aroostook County finds a set of farmers that are doing business upon a large scale, buying in large quantities, operating large areas and selling potatoes by the carload. The southern planter or seed dealer entering the county in search of seeds for southern planters finds a wealth of vigor in the luxurious growth of potato vines that is difficult to duplicate in other seed producing areas; and the farmers from other sections who go into the county to spend a few days of their vacation, find there a group of farmers using the most up to date methods, the best seed available and the most improved labor saving equipment.

There have been times when Aroostook seed was criticized by the southern grower. That, however, was before the discovery of ways and means of eliminating certain diseases of the crop. With the discovery by the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station, of ways of identifying these diseases and with the spread of this information throughout the county by the Extension Service of the College of Agriculture, the elimination of these diseases has progressed rapidly. The inspection work of the State Department of Agriculture in seed certification has been a big factor in raising the standard of the seed shipped out of the county. So the southern buyer is again looking to Aroostook County as his best source of seed.

The large development that has taken place in the potato industry in Aroostook County since 1900 has been the result of a condition where farmers are practically dependent upon this one crop as a source of cash income and where these farmers, realizing this fact, have striven to develop the industry on the basis of efficient production. Other sources of income may sometime be developed, but the potato will continue to be the one all important source of income until some decided change takes place in the economic condition of the country.

Potatoes, however are not the only crop that is grown in Aroostook County. In 1924 there was produced 2,819,000 bushels of oats and 256,000 bushels of buckwheat. A yield of sixty to seventy bushels of oats per acre are not at all uncommon and large areas have reported an average of 100 bushels per acre under good conditions. The cool, moist climate in combination with the very favorable soil conditions meet the requirements of this crop as satisfactorily as they do the requirements of the potato crop.

The Maine Potato crop for 1926 is estimated in an excess of 37,000,000 bushels, over 30,000,000 of which are located in Aroostook County. Aroostook will probably ship to the consuming centers from its 1926 crop in excess of forty thousand cars. These shipments are made possible only by the fact that railroad transportation is available to every section of the producing areas of the country. The lines of the Bangor and Aroostook Railroad traverse the entire length and breadth of the potato producing sections, while other lines give added service to certain of the more important areas.

KATAHDIN

KATAHDIN will endure. Its storm-bitten granitic lifts far above the timber desired of man, its boulder-strewn gorges and glooming precipices repel the feet of any but those hardy men and women who find joy in the primitive conquest of a mountain. Nothing can be taken away from it, for long ago the receding ice and the winter storms stripped it naked. Remote, inaccessible, it rises from the green inland ocean like an eternal symbol of the rock on which man and all his works are based. It is the solemn grandeur of elemental things. It is the brooding spirit of a continent before the dawn. Some day, perhaps, man will make it possible to reach the base of Katahdin in a motor-car; some day there may even be a motor road to the summit. But before that day comes I trust that I shall have poled down my last rapids and been swept out on the nameless deep. Every time a motor road is built up a mountain the world loses some of its wonder; every time it is made easy for man to conquer the last remaining symbols of a primitive continent, something precious is lost of our national heritage. May old Katahdin always remain the lord of a lonely wilderness!—Walter Prichard Eaton in Scribner's Magazine.

EAGLE LAKE CAMPS — ASSEMBLY ROOM

There is no better spot in Maine for fishing and hunting. Waters are famous for record trout and salmon; fly fishing all summer. Surrounding country abounds in deer, bears, few moose and game birds.

Eagle Lake Camps are a model woods resort. Electric lights and running water in all cabins. Six cabins with baths. All conveniences are provided without the loss of real Woodsy Rustic Charm. Two large motor boats and canoes for the use of guests. Camps are reached by motor boat six miles from Eagle Lake railroad station.

Northern Maine is famous for its cool nights, dry and invigorating atmosphere, laden with health-giving qualities from the pine and balsam forest. Private cabins with baths; also large, spacious dining room and office.

HUNTERS!

For six years I have been with these camps. Every hunter who has spent a week to ten days with us has taken his deer allotment home. We have five outside camps in different directions from the main camp. Our camps command 100 square miles of hunting grounds.

Eagle Lake is 18 miles long and as deep as 125 feet. Big Fish, Portage and St. Froid Lakes, and all Red River lakes flow into it from one side. Long Lake, Mud Lake, Cross Lake and Square Lake flow into it from the other side. It is screened, and we claim as good early fishing as any place and better Summer fishing than any place for Salmon.

SAUL MICHAUD,
Director and Manager

LAKE ONAWA

On Lake Onawa, called by many the most beautiful lake in Maine, are situated ONAWA LAKE CAMPS, formerly Young & Buxtons but now under new management. Onawa, one of the original Landlocked Salmon lakes of the State, is entirely surrounded by mountains and was screened a year ago and is now showing wonderful fishing. The camps have been completely refurnished with new beds and running water and new boats provided. A fine sand beach for bathing. A beautiful place to spend your summer vacation and the hunter will here find large game in abundance. Terms and descriptive circulars sent on request.

My home camps are 16 miles from Ashland Station; famous for its exceptional Bear and Deer Hunting, and Bird Shooting. I also have excellent Lake and Stream Trout Fishing. Ask those who have been with me. For full particulars, illustrated booklet and references will be forwarded upon request.

V. E. LYNCH, Famous Guide, Expert Trapper and Editor of the Trapping Department of National Sportsman Magazine, Proprietor.
BOX 45 ASHLAND, MAINE

Bear in mind that:

MAYNARD'S CAMPS are in the heart of the Moosehead Lake region and on one of the best trout and salmon rivers in the state. 100 ponds and streams reached by car and canoe from camp, trout in all of them. About 1000 deer shipped yearly out of Kineo Station. 40 miles from Canadian border, and reached by auto over good roads via St. Zacharie, Canada; by train via Bangor & Aroostook R. R. and Maine Central Railroad.

Telephone and telegraph connections; private cabins; spring water and good food. With and without baths; running water in every cabin.

Rates, $21.00 to $35.00 per Week

Write for maps and descriptive booklet.

“Old in Years but Young in Spirit”

THIS BANK will celebrate its 73rd birthday this year. During this long period since the bank was established it has accumulated a fund of experience and banking connections in other cities which are of inestimable advantage to its customers.

¶ It is, however, imbued with the modern, helpful, progressive spirit. It offers every banking and trust service which any bank or trust company can provide.

¶ It has no branches, its business being centralized in Bangor, under the immediate and constant supervision of its officers and directors.

¶ It solicits your banking business in person or by mail in any of its departments.
